D. C. Playing The Numbers Still, Despite Warring Fate

Maj. Brown Afraid Just as Much Is Bet as Ever; Game Run From Outside

By Edward T. Folliard

Washington is still playing the numbers game.

Some of the big shots who handled the stakes are gone from the racket, but that has not chilled Washington's passion for gambling or deterred others from trying to make money on that passion.

It is pretty much the same situation as existed during prohibition days.

When Al Capone was sentenced to 11 years at Alcatraz in 1931, it was hailed as a great triumph for law and order. So, too, was the arrest of the "Man in the Green Hat" on Capitol Hill. However, it did not stop bootlegging.

No Great Dent

Neither has the prosecution of the Warring brothers put any great dent in numbers gambling in Washington. The police do not even attempt to claim it has. When the Warring brothers withdrew from the racket, other gambling barons went after the $2,000,000-a-year gross business they had been doing.

Most henchmen of the Warring brothers have entered the service of these other big operators. This is particularly true of the "writers," the fellows who cover a particular area, writing down bets and collecting money. They "turn in" to runners, who carry the slips and the money to the counting rooms of the operators in Prince Georges County, Md.

Free Across the Line

The fact that these bankers continue to operate unmolested across the District line is one of the heaviest crosses about which the Washington police complain.

Five months ago Commissioner Hazen held what was expected to be a momentous conference on this problem. He was trying to work out some plan whereby the Washington police could get at the numbers racketeers who operate here, but who make their headquarters across the boundary line, so he called in representatives of Prince Georges and Montgomery Counties in Maryland and representatives of Alexandria, Arlington and Fairfax counties in Virginia.

There was a lengthy discussion of reciprocity, co-operation and a "hot pursuit" law, but in the intervening months no action has been taken.

Jimmy's Closed, at Least Now

True, Jimmy La Fontaine's big gambling house just over the District line in Prince Georges County is closed—"temporarily," the underworld insists. However, the police say that there are still five or six important numbers operators who have their headquarters in that county.

The Warring brothers owe their present dilemma not to arrests on gambling charges, but to income tax trouble. Last week, however, the local police did get one numbers operator they had been after for a long time—Carroll Bailey. He and two colleagues, Leonard D. McKay and Horton S. Grinder, were convicted of criminal conspiracy, and now face sentences of from four months to two years.

Even more important than this, in the eyes of Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police, was the conviction Thursday of two relatively minor offenders—Edward F. Coupe, 36, a Navy Yard worker, and Henry Lynch, 34, colored, who had been arrested by the vice squad.

After a chase that ended when the men abandoned their automobile near the Maryland line, the po-

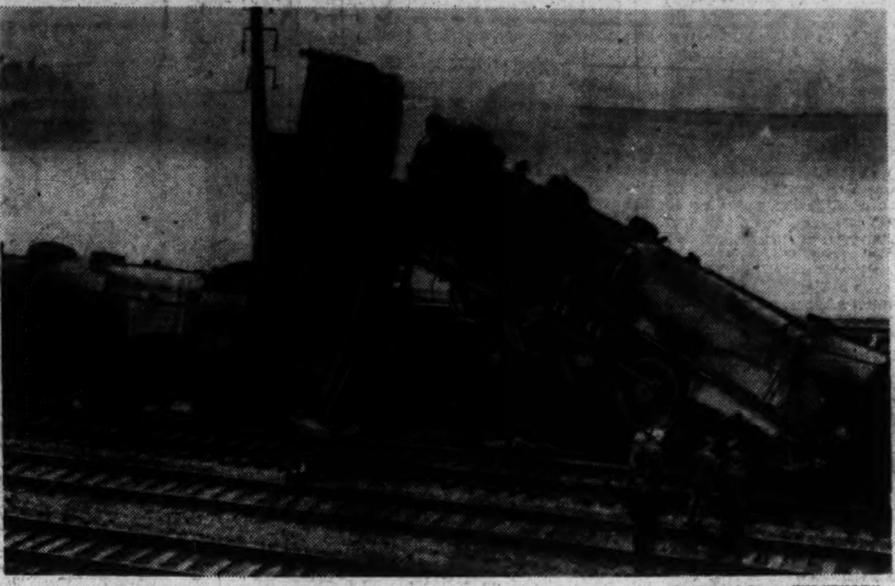
5 Killed, 4 Hurt as Freight Train Leaves Pennsylvania's Rails Near Pittsburgh



Associated Press WIREPHOTO.

Five trainmen were killed when two freight locomotives of the Pennsylvania Railroad hitched tandem plunged through a derail and over a "stub" track at Pittsburgh yesterday. At center (right) rescue workers are removing the body of one of the victims

By the Associated Press.

Pittsburgh, April 30.—Five men were killed and four injured when a double-header freight train ran through a derail and over the end of a "stub track" on the Pennsylvania Railroad near here today.

The dead are: E. Feeney, 52, engineman, and D. R. Conroy, 43, fireman, both of Columbus, Ohio, and D. H. Lingenfelter, 45, engineman; C. E. Rine, 45, fireman, and I. Ramsaur, 54, conductor, all of Dennison, Ohio.

Injured were Brakeman O. E. Winrod and Flagman E. E. Mace, both of Dennison, and two men termed "trespassers" by officials.

Charles Yeager, 18, of Danville, Pa., had both legs cut off below the knees and Smith Sones, 28, of Milton, Pa., had an injured left foot.

Pennsylvania Railroad officials said they did not know how the accident occurred and "would probably never know as all the trainmen are dead."

Bishop Denny Ignores Union Of Methodists

Va. Prelate Says He Represents Only Southern Church

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., April 30.—Bishop Collins Denny, outspoken critic of the plan to unite the three branches of Methodism, said today he intended to "remain a bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, subject to its jurisdiction alone."

Bishop Denny said he sent a letter to the uniting conference of the Methodist Church at Kansas City expressing his unwillingness to become a bishop of that church, but that it had been returned by the conference.

"After declining a request from one of the bishops imploring me to withdraw the communication, its receipt was officially announced to the conference and it was referred unread to a special committee," Bishop Denny said.

Wouldn't Present Letter

The committee, he said, informed him that the letter would not be presented to the conference, but that he should send it to the first general conference of the new Church "which is to meet at a time yet undetermined."

He said he was "unwilling that the members of the conference and of my Church be longer kept in ignorance of my intention.' '

Bishop Denny stated in the letter "I cannot join with you in the organization of the Methodist Church; I cannot accept the benefits of your plan of union which offers to make me a bishop of the Methodist Church; I cannot submit to the jurisdiction of the Methodist Church which you are met to create."

The Methodist Episcopal Church, he said, was formed by those who

Pendergast Faces U.S. Charges Today

Kansas City, April 30 (INS).—Tom J. Pendergast, 66-year-old political boss of Kansas City, will be arraigned tomorrow morning on federal indictments charging income tax evasion on $443,550.

His followers were certain their chief would put up a fight. They termed the accusations "political trickery."

Gunmen Who Shot Two Here Believed Baltimore Killers

Police are working on the theory that two armed bandits who shot and critically wounded two men within an hour Saturday night, apparently without a robbery motive, are the same colored men that shot and killed a Baltimore liquor shop proprietor ten days ago.

They arrived at this conclusion when detectives visited Malcolm Crockett, one of the victims, yesterday afternoon.

Crockett, a 32-year-old cab driver of Alexandria, was shot through the mouth and unable to talk. Detective Sergeants E. E. Thompson and Elmer Lewis gave him pencil and paper at Casualty Hospital and he wrote replies to their questions.

The other wounded man, Lee Tew, 62-year-old Chinese laundryman of 521 Q street northwest, shot in the back, remained unconscious all day at Sibley Hospital and interpreters were unable to question him.

But the description of his attackers Tew gave before he became unconscious and that Crockett laboriously penned for the detectives tallied with the lookout flashed from Baltimore when Myer Jacobs, owner of a liquor store on the Washington boulevard near the city limits was killed in an attempted holdup April 21.

Child Health Drive Opens Here Today

Week's Program to Stress Educational Work in Nutrition

By Christine Sadler

With the accent on nutrition and consumer education, District health and welfare agencies this morning join the Nation in a program for observance of Child Health Week.

May Day has been official Child Health Day in America for 11 years, but is of added significance in 1939 because of the White House Conference on Children in a Democracy, which last week inaugurated a year for the study of the country's child resources.

In the District of Columbia, as elsewhere, this week will be one of stock-taking on ways to apply the information already available—and to get it across to those who need it most.

Nutrition Is Keynote

Families with the greatest number of children, following the general rule, are in the income groups with the least money to spend for nourishing food—and the least knowledge of how to make a dollar buy its full weight in nutrition.

Each settlement house in the District has registered its need for work in nutrition with parents. Home visits of adult educators and visiting nurses have borne out the conviction of Washington welfare leaders that there is a great local need for nutrition education, if growing children are to be fed properly.

Growing Child's Problem

An adequate salary does not mean that the family receiving it is getting adequate nutrition or knows much about food buying. Consumer learning is the weak link in the educational system, especially when health of the growing child is considered.

Stores, schools and dairies are co-operating with the District health agencies to pack as much consumer and health education into this week as possible. Exhibits, lectures, pamphlets, movies and programs will tell the story.

Mrs. Elizabeth Grant, nutritionist with the District Health Department, has announced that the growing child's food needs will be stressed this year because of success accomplished during Child

U. S. Wholesale Trade Rises $200,000,000

Commerce Report on First Quarter Shows Big Gain Over 1938

Dollar volume of wholesale trade in the United States in the first quarter of this year totaled $4,600,000,000, an increase of $200,000,000 over the 1938 quarter, the Department of Commerce estimated yesterday. March sales were placed at 4.8 per cent above those of the previous March.

The report pointed out that the first quarter of 1937 was "one of the most highly successful periods in recent years" but in that quarter sales were only 14 per cent above those of the quarter just closed, while prices now are more than 10 per cent lower than in 1937.

"The significance of the report for the first three months of this year," Secretary Hopkins said, "is that wholesale trade has regained approximately 20 per cent of the dollar sales volume lost between the high and low points of the 1937-38 business cycle."

At the same time the Treasury Department reported that $2,206,008,900 of United States "baby bonds" are now in the hands of small savers. Sales in 1938 average $2,334,300 each business day.

Odd developments in the nation's foreign trade, considered in the light of political considerations, included another report by the Commerce Department that an all-time high had been reached in shipment of American metal-working machinery, "the basic tool of industry," to Kwantung, the Japanese leased territory in China in which is located the city of Darien, chief port of entry for Manchukuo. The figures indicate the part American machinery is playing in Japan's industrialization of the seized Manchukuan territory.

Eat Hearty, Pa, If You Want Baby to Be a Boy

New York, April 30 (INS).—The nutrition of parents may determine to a large extent whether the offspring will be a male or female, according to experimental results obtained by three University of Chicago scientists, it was learned today.

If the father is relatively better nourished, especially in the consumption of protein foods, the offspring is more likely to be male. With better fed mothers, there is a greater expectation of female progeny.

This is the general result of studies made upon rats—and believed possibly true for human beings—by Drs. F. Hoelzel, Esther da Costa and A. J. Carlson, physiologists of the University of Chicago.

U. S. C. of C. Here to Seek Business Cure

To Convene Today With Theme Pointing To Recovery Based on Private Investments

A concerted demand for recovery efforts based on stimulation of private investment leads the agenda as more than 2,000 business spokesmen from every section of the country convene in the Capital today for the twenty-seventh annual meeting of the United States Chamber of Commerce.

The four-day session of the chamber, considered one of the Nation's most important forums of business opinion, is expected to recommend reduction of Government spending and taxation and revision of the Wagner act, while pleadging support to industrial mobilization for defense.

Only one Republican officeholder, Representative Bruce Barton, of New York, has been invited to speak before the convention, it was noted here last night, while three leaders of the conservative Democratic wing are addressing the chamber. They are Senators Harry F. Byrd, of Virginia; Pat Harrison, of Mississippi, and Edward Burke, of Nebraska.

Hopkins Speech Canceled

Secretary of Commerce Hopkins, it was announced, has been obliged because of ill health to cancel his scheduled speech on "What the Federal Government Can Do to Help."

"While my recovery had been much slower than I expected," Hopkins wrote George Davis, Chamber president, "I had believed up to now that I would have the energy to write personally the speech that the occasion warrants, but I find that I cannot do it."

No Commerce Department official has been invited to take the Secretary's place, but there was a possibility, officials said, that Attorney General Murphy might be asked to speak for the Administration.

President Roosevelt early this month declined to address the group because of "pressing affairs," but later agreed to speak before the National Retail Manufacturers Association, described in New Deal circles as a "more liberal" organization.

Attempt "to Show Way"

Theme of the convention, as announced in an official statement by the chamber last night, is "to try to find a practical answer to the question everybody is asking: What is holding business back?

"The greatest single force which pulled this country out of past depressions was the flow of capital into old and new enterprises," according to the statement. For 12 years prior to the depression, the chamber points out, the annual flow of new capital into private enterprise averaged $3,375,000,000, while since 1930 new issues of stocks and bonds have amounted to only one-fifth that amount.

"There are estimates of the capital needs of business which range from $40,000,000,000 to nearly twice that sum," the chamber declared. "We all know there is a tremendous pent-up need for expenditures upon capital goods." The chamber convention, the statement concludes, will attempt to "show the way" to a resumption of the flow of new capital.

Delegates will carry their recovery program direct to Congress

Sewer Explosions Rock Chicago, Injure Three

Chicago, April 30 (AP).—A series of sewer explosions of undetermined cause shook the far west side of the city at 5 a. m. today, injuring three persons.

Innumerable manhole covers were blown high into the air and hundreds of persons fled from their homes as the staccato explosions progressed along a path two blocks in width and more than a mile in length.

David Biggerstaff, 22, was knocked to the street by the force of the explosion. Mrs. Mary Kopystynski, 43, was burned about the head when a sheet of flame shot up through the wall of her frame home. Bernard Waegelein, 29, was slightly hurt when his automobile was blown several feet into the air.

Roosevelt, 627,000 Open New York Fair

Associated Press WIREPHOTO.

Flanked by Boy Scouts, President Roosevelt yesterday opened New York's $160,000,000 World's Fair with an address in which he said America has "hitched her wagon to a star of goodwill." He emphasized the United States' desire for pacific living among the countries of the world and expressed hope that the future would see a breakdown of "many barriers of intercourse" among European nations

Americas Are United In Seeking Peace, President Declares

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 30.—President Roosevelt told a war-frightened world today the United States stood united in a desire to "encourage peace" and expressed for "all the Americas" the hope that the years to come will "break down many barriers of intercourse" between nations in Europe.

Opening the New York World's Fair, the Chief Executive avoided any reference to Chancellor Hitler's Reichstag address, but rededicated America to the cause of international good-will and declared her wagon was "hitched to a star."

"But it is a star of good-will, a star of progress for mankind, a star of greater happiness and less hardship, a star of international good-will and, above all, a star of peace," he said.

Speaks in "Court of Peace"

"May the months to come carry us forward in the rays of that hope."

The President spoke in the outdoor "Court of Peace."

On the speakers' stand were the President's wife and mother and other members of his family. Representatives of many of the 60 nations exhibiting at the fair were present, as were some members of the Supreme Court and Cabinet.

Gov. Lehman and Mayor LaGuardia were other speakers on the hour's opening program, which began shortly after the President attended a private luncheon in the $3,000,000 Federal Building encircling the Court of Peace. Down a broad vista not far away were the exhibition's symbols of the "World of Tomorrow," the trylon and perisphere.

Broadcast Over World

The President's words, devoted largely to historical references and the growth of America since the inauguration of Washington as first President 150 years ago today, were carried by radio over the Nation and throughout the world.

He said sectionalism and regional jealousies had been replaced by "national solidarity of economic and social thought," due to the form of government and its "spirit of wise tolerance."

He said the United States stood today as "a completely homogeneous nation . . . united in its desire to encourage peace and good-will among all the nations of the world."

World of Tomorrow Has the Same Old Hot Dogs, Both Kinds

By Inez Robb.

World's Fair Grounds, New York, April 30.—Bigger than Ben Hur, better than Barnum, a brave new World of Tomorrow marched across time to Flushing Meadows today, where President Roosevelt officially opened New York's $156,000,000 World's Fair of 1939, and 1940, too.

Literally the greatest show on earth, it amazed, excited, amused and awed the curious, milling throng whose presence in the World of Tomorrow demonstrated that what was good enough for their grandpas isn't necessarily good enough for their grandchildren.

With its foundations anchored in the mud of the glacial age, which underlies Flushing Meadows, and its towers thrusting themselves into the heavens, the World of Tomorrow offered 627,000 first day patrons 1,216½ acres of wonders to challenge the mind, surfeit the imagination and destroy the pedal extremities.

Skies Are Fair

It even offered them partially fair weather, the first in this vicinity in days. Although it rained a bit late in the afternoon, there was a blue sky and bright sun for the opening ceremonies in the court of Peace where, in the shadow of the Federal Building, President Roosevelt, New York's Gov. Lehman, Mayor LaGuardia and Grover A. Whalen, president of the New York World's Fair, spoke before 40,000 invited guests.

But while 40,000 persons jammed the Court of Peace for the opening ceremonies, many times that number doggedly plowed their way over the two square miles that constitute the World of Tomorrow, determined to see as many of its

Halted Soviet Fliers Land In New York in Rented Plane

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 30.—Two Russian aviators tonight concluded a flight from Moscow which was projected as a nonstop venture but required three installments. They landed at Floyd Bennett Field at 9:32 p. m. (E.S.T.).

Brig. Gen. Vladimir Kokkinaki, Soviet ace, and his navigator-radio operator, Maj. Mikhail Gordienko, stepped out of a chartered plane after a quick hop from Moncton, N. B.

Earlier they had been "ferried" to Moncton from Miscou island, where their flight from Moscow ended Friday night in a forced landing.

The plane which brought them on the last leg of the journey was a 14-passenger ship owned by Harold S. Vanderbilt and chartered by Russian officials. It was piloted by Russell K. Thaw.

Among the hundreds at the airport were members of the Russian colony, Constantine Oumansky, Soviet charge d'affaires, was among the first to greet the fliers. He read them a message of felicitation from Joseph Stalin.

The fliers said they would attend the New York World's Fair tomorrow afternoon. Their original plans were to arrive for the fair's inaugural.

Demands Increased

By the Associated Press.

Warsaw, April 30.—A reliable authority reported today that Reichsfuehrer Hitler had followed up German demands on Poland concerning the Free City of Danzig and the Polish Corridor with more specific details of what he wants.

This source said the Fuehrer had notified Poland the extraterritorial motor road he wants across the Polish Corridor to connect Germany and East Prussia must be not less than 25 kilometers (15.5 miles) wide.

Since Poland long has made it plain that she will fight rather than abandon any of her territory, mobilizing more than 1,000,000 men to back up her stand, observers took Hitler's reported "specifications" as a sign he intends to push his demands nevertheless.

Seeks to Frighten Warsaw

Some sources said they saw behind his additional details, said to have been conveyed privately to Poland, an attempt to frighten Warsaw into granting what he originally asked.

[The London Daily Mail reported from Berlin that Hitler said he would give Poland two weeks of "grace" in which to yield, International News Service said.

[Poland's failure to comply within the fortnight, the dispatch added, will mean "stronger and more detailed demands, even followed up by threats."—Editor's note.]

(In his speech Friday to the Reichstag and in a note to Poland denouncing the 1934 German-Polish nonaggression treaty, Hitler demanded return of the Free City to Germany and a highway and railroad connection between East Prussia and the rest of the Reich.

(In return, he offered recognition of the Polish Corridor and Poland's western frontier, conclusion of a 25-year non-aggression pact, security of Poland's economic interests in Danzig and consideration of Polish interests in connection with the security of the independence of Slovakia, under German protection since dissolution of Czecho-Slovakia.)

Beck to Answer Friday

Nazi leaders first made their demands for an extra-territorial highway and for outright annexation of Danzig a month ago, shortly after return of Memel from Lithuania to Germany.

Foreign Minister Beck is expected to make it plain in an address next Friday to the Parliamentary Foreign Affairs committee, that Poland has nothing to give to Germany.

It was reported reliably the foreign minister's speech would contain a strong protect against Hitler's assertion that the Polish-German non-aggression pact forbade Poland to cooperate with other countries.

Latest rumor which the inner circle of New Dealers would like to believe is that Jim Farley has finally decided that on grounds of loyalty he will support Franklin Roosevelt if the President decides to run for a third term.

At the eleventh hour the New Dealers have finally found time to do a little picking up and tidying around the Washington bureaus. It's almost as if they were expecting company in 1940.

Hopes Fade Of Adjourning Congress Soon

Legislative Jam May Prolong Session Until Early August

By the United Press.

The Seventy-sixth Congress enters its fifth month today with only the passage of routine appropriation bills to mar its "do nothing" record.

So clogged are the legislative turbines with important measures that leaders have given up all hope of bringing about a sine die adjournment until early August. The more pessimistic believe the session will extend throughout the entire summer.

Here are some of the problems with which the legislators must grapple before they go home:

Revisions in the neutrality law
Changes in the social security act
Rehabilitation of the railroads
Amendments to the Wagner Labor act
An agricultural program, including disposition of the Nation's cotton surplus
Taxes
Relief
Extension of emergency monetary powers.

Handle Political Dynamite

Strong forces behind all of these measures will make it difficult for leaders to throw any of them overboard in the scramble for adjournment. Some issues, such a railroad rehabilitation and labor law changes, however, may be compromised in the interest of a shorter session.

Legislators see the proposed changes in the social security act as one of the major stumbling blocks. The law is political dynamite. Republicans want to amend it to place the program on a "pay-as-you-go" basis. The House Ways and Means Committee has agreed to freeze the pay roll tax at 1 per cent for 3 years and the Senate Finance Committee will follow suit.

Whether business will get additional tax relief at this session is problematical. The zones within which it could fall have been highly restricted. President Roosevelt and his congressional aides agree that the tax load cannot be shifted from the large corporation to the small one, and that no changes shall be made which will reduce the total Federal revenue. These boundaries leave open only the reshuffling of taxes hitting larger enterprises.

Prospects of Federal economies, also demanded by business to spur economic recovery, have faded. There is little likelihood that the legislators will trim the President's $9,000,000,000 budget, and more prospects that they will increase it. The only substantial saving made thus far was the $50,000,000 cut in the deficiency relief bill, and it came only after a blistering fight.

It's Only Curtain Raiser

This battle was only the curtain-raiser for the one to come when the President's recommendation for $1,750,000,000 to finance relief for the coming fiscal year is called up.

The ultimate pattern of the farm program is in doubt. So is the final shape of the revised neutrality act. Either or both may bring Senate filibusters. The same danger is inherent in proposed changes in the Wagner act.

The only "must" measure on the Administration's legislative slate which has been approved by both houses is the Government reorganization bill. Mr. Roosevelt last week invoked powers granted him under the law to propose sweeping changes in the Federal lending, relief and welfare activities. They will be approved after desultory congressional debate.

More important to the Administration than Government reorganization is the extension of certain monetary powers voted to the President during the depression. They include the $2,000,000,000 stabilization fund, the power to devalue the dollar and the silver purchase authority. The House approved the legislation after mild verbal fireworks, but it will have much harder sledding in the Senate, where its outstanding opponent is Senator Glass (Democrat) of Virginia.

Dr. Sells Urges British System For Labor Peace

Possibility of using British employer-employe committee system in the administration of this country's fair labor standards act is discussed in a study of the English trade boards by Dr. Dorothy Sells, which is being published today by the Brookings Institution.

Satisfactory wage adjustments are more likely to be reached through direct negotiation between parties concerned than by administrative formula, it was pointed out.

The fair labor standards act of this country is similar to the British system, where wage adjustment is made by face to face labor-employer Mrs. Frank Himilton, of 1915 G representative industrial committees with the final, if limited, power to determine minimum wage rates, the author stated.

Civil Airplane Production Down

Aircraft production for the civil domestic and export markets declined from 2,915 planes in 1937 to 2,698 in 1938, the Civil Aeronautics Authority reported yesterday. Exports of aircraft increased nearly 40 per cent, however, with 875 planes shipped abroad in 1938.

Domestic civil production included 1,706 monoplanes and 117 biplanes. One autogiro, six lighter-than-air craft and 32 gliders were manufactured in 1938.

The Gallup Poll

British Survey Shows 42 Pct. Favor Draft For Army; 58 Pct. Voluntary Enlistment

By Dr. George Gallup
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

New York, April 30.—Great Britain broke with a tradition of centuries on Thursday with the House of Commons' acceptance of the principle of peace-time compulsory military service, but there are unmistakable signs that even in their determination to stand up to the dictators the British people are not willing to abandon the principle of voluntary service altogether.

GEORGE GALLUP

A survey conducted among a cross-section of the people of Great Britain by the British Institute of Public Opinion, overseas affiliate of the American Institute, shows that almost six Britons in ten oppose adopting the compulsory idea in the present recruiting drive for the regular army.

Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain's announcement of conscription of youths of 20 to 21 for military training did not go so far as to include conscription to fill the present gaps in Britain's blueprint army.

That will be left to voluntary choice of Britain's young men—unless war should come.

The British survey, which was begun a fortnight ago, before Chamberlain's announcement, put the following question to men and women in all walks of life:

"It has been decided to enlarge the British army to 33 field divisions. Are you in favor of obtaining the necessary recruits on a planned and compulsory basis, or by leaving it to individuals to enroll voluntarily?"

The vote of the national cross-section was:

Favor compulsory system...42%
Favor voluntary system.....58%

The survey helps to explain the reluctance of Prime Minister Chamberlain in announcing compulsory military training to the British people—something both he and his predecessor, Stanley Baldwin, had promised would not be introduced in peacetime during the life of the present Parliament.

Government Support Split

Both opposition voters and a substantial number of government supporters are united in disapproval of the further step—compulsory recruiting—which the ministry might conceivably consider next.

The vote by parties is:

COMPULSORY RECRUITING?

	For	Against
Governm't supporters	51%	49%
Opposition voters	33	67

Throughout the country only one person in twelve expressed himself as having no opinion.

Justice Department to Open Western Oil Monopoly Probe

Federal Grand Jury to Hear Charges Firms Raised Gasoline Prices Through Concerted Action

By the Associated Press.

The Justice Department announced yesterday that an inquiry into "alleged monopolistic practices by oil companies on the Pacific Coast area" would be started "in the near future."

The investigation will be before a Federal grand jury in the Southern District of California "to ascertain whether prosecutions for violation of the antitrust laws should be had," the department said.

The announcement was issued by Thurman Arnold, Assistant Attorney General in charge of the antitrust division.

Gasoline Price Is Clew

Major oil companies refine 84 per cent and distribute 85 per cent of the gasoline in the Pacific Coast area, the department said.

"In 1936 the price of gasoline rose sharply throughout the Pacific Coast area, and it has since exhibited a stability without precedent in the area," Arnold said.

The price advances, he continued, have resulted in "complaints and Government investigations" of charges that "by resort to various practices all substantial competition in the marketing of petroleum products is being eliminated."

"A comparatively small number of companies occupy such a predominant position in the Pacific Coast oil industry, that concerted action to restrict competition may easily place in the hands of a few companies the power to fix monopolistics prices," he added.

Arnold said an investigation resulted in a consent decree to end "monopolistic practices" in the Pacific Coast industry in 1930, but that complaints beginning in 1936 charged "monopolistic practices similar to those which led to the 1930 decree were being resorted to."

Results of an inquiry by the Federal Trade Commission and the Department of Justice into the new charges would be presented to the grand jury, he said.

Four Senators Call for Aid For Farm Area

All on Air Forum, However, Agree No Solution Is in Sight

By International News Service.

Senators from regions where four of the Nation's principal farm products are grown took to the air last night to urge aid for restoring farm prosperity, but admittedly without a plan for a permanent solution of the farm problems.

The speakers were Senator La Follette (Progressive), of Wisconsin, representing the dairy farmer interests; Senator Frazier (Republican), of North Dakota, for the wheat States; Senator Bankhead (Democrat), of Alabama, speaking for the cotton growers, and Senator Lucas (Democrat), of Illinois, center of the Nation's corn belt.

Speaking over a Nation-wide hook-up of the Mutual Broadcasting System, all bemoaned the heavy surpluses in farm commodities, low prevailing prices, yet declared that, though "progress" was in the making, no permanent program to restore farm prosperity had been devised.

Lucas Urges Laws

Lucas declared that in the absence of a more permanent program, the present act providing for loans on commodities and subsidizing exports of surpluses should be given "a fair trial" before any change is made in the law, but asserted:

"Until some genius, statesman, or economist rectifies the flaws in our system of distribution, agricultural legislation controlling the chronic surpluses of basic commodities is indispensable."

This has been the "controlling thought" of agriculture leaders who during the past eighteen years "have made an honest attempt to solve this problem through legislative action," Lucas said.

Under Cloud of Fear

"Emergency legislation will be necessary for some time to come," he said, "and this is true primarily because for years we have legislated under a cloud of fear, always wondering whether the law would meet the constitutional test, the result being that there have developed serious commodity and sectional differences, and the proof of this statement can be found by examining the record of the House of Representatives during a recent session when the members thereof defeated all farm legislation mainly because there was no unified attempt to meet all emergencies."

LaFollette urged extension of the government's export subsidy plan for surpluses to dairy products, especially butter and cheese, declaring that welfare of 3,000,000 dairy farmers was at stake.

He Points to Low Prices

He pointed out that butter and cheese stocks on hand were far higher than the average for the last five years, butter prices being the lowest since 1933 and cheese prices the lowest since 1924.

"I contend," La Follette said, "that large agricultural appropriations are essential at this time to meet an increasing critical situation which is facing dairy and other farmers. More important still, a sharp decrease in farm buying power will mean a sharp decrease in business activity, which in turn will depress farm markets still more and thus precipitate another vicious downward spiral in our whole economic life."

Senator Frazier assailed the grain exchanges, declaring trading in futures "is mere gambling in price fluctuations."

"Gamble in Life's Necessities"

"The grain exchanges gamble in life's necessities," he said, "and as long as our laws permit the gamblers to manipulate the price that the farmer shall receive for his wheat, just so long will we have an unfair and dishonest market for both the producer and the consumer."

Senator Bankhead, pointing out that cotton exports made up 90 per cent of the favorable United States balance of trade up to 1936, declared collapse of the world market for cotton had not only slashed income of Southern farmers by $1,000,000,000, but this loss had cut off the purchasing power of the South for farm and manufactured products of the North and West, and crippled the transportation industry. He urged extension of the export subsidy plan as a means of alleviating distress of the cotton farmer, and increasing his purchasing power.

Burke Drops Hope to Alter Labor Act Now

Lewis Charges Green Drew Up Amendments With Industry's Aid

By the Associated Press.

Senator Burke (Democrat), a leader in the move to revise the Wagner labor act, said yesterday his group virtually has abandoned hope of amending the law in this Congress.

Burke said there was no chance to accomplish this unless the session runs into August, which is considered unlikely.

"We are more interested right now," he added, "in building up the record to show the inherent weaknesses in the law than we are in obtaining immediate action. When we have done that and done it thoroughly, we will be ready for action, whether it is in this Congress or the next."

Green to Testify

Proponents of revision will have an inning before the Senate Education and Labor Committee tomorrow. President Green of the American Federation of Labor has been called as a witness at that hearing.

Senator Ellender (Democrat), Louisiana, a committee member, said that "unless Mr. Green can make out a case, I doubt if any serious effort will be made to procure enactment of amendments."

"The mere fact that hearings on amendments have been held has done a lot of good in that the National Labor Relations Board has been placed on notice of the chief causes of complaint against the administration of the act," he asserted."

John L. Lewis, president of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, charged Saturday in a letter to the Senate committee that the amendments sponsored by Green and introduced by Senator Walsh (Democrat), Massachusetts, were "prepared with the aid, advice and counsel of representatives of the National Association of Manufacturers and of several of the most reactionary and anti-labor corporations of the country."

Green Demands Proof

Green immediately retorted that "there is not one word of truth in the allegation" and challenged Lewis to prove it.

Walsh said yesterday he had no knowledge of how the amendments were drafted, adding:

"I introduced them on the theory that any group of labor leaders should be heard and their arguments considered by the committee."

Senator Burke took cognizance of the controversy by saying:

"The fulminations of Mr. Lewis impress me as being the favorite method of attack by those who are unable or unwilling to meet an issue squarely and discuss it on its merits.

"I am sure the committee, in its wisdom, will altogether disregard these charges, giving, however, Mr. Lewis the opportunity to come before it and show, if he can, why the A. F. L. amendments would not make the application of the law fair."

War or Peace Up to Foes, Nazis Warn

Hitler to Speak Twice Today; Danzig To Celebrate

By the Associated Press.

Berlin, April 30.—Nazis took the view tonight that Reichsfuehrer Hitled had put it up to his opponents to decide whether they want war or peace.

Responsible quarters emphasized this as the nation prepared for May Day festivities tomorrow which will give the Fuehrer two more opportunities to speak.

He will address Berlin's Hitler Youth in the morning, and at noon will speak to members of the Labor Front. There was no indication what he might say.

The Free City of Danzig also was preparing to celebrate May Day in Nazi fashion with increased hopes that before another year passes it will be part of Germany again.

Count on Hitler

Danzigers, conscious that their city suddenly had taken a leading role in European affairs, placed their confidence in Hitler's assertion before the Reichstag Friday that "Danzig is German and wants to return to Germany." They regarded it as meaning the Fuehrer intended to see that the city's wishes are fulfilled.

Rudolf Kircher, editor of the Frankfurter Zeitung, expressed in print what informed quarters believed to be the situation. He wrote:

"The western powers must decide what they really want—war or peace.

"They are standing at a halfway point. Of the value of our weapons and of our fortifications, they must be well informed—but is it not possible to try boycotting and 'starvation?'

Germany Would Fight

"The Fuehrer gave an answer to this: In such a case the nation would rather fight . . .

"It is now a matter for the English and Poles to investigate whether . . . the formal interference of the British government in German-Polish affairs and the new tis between Poland and England—is valuable enough to the governments and peoples of these two countries to compensate for the loss of the two treaties.

"For the English the question arises whether, since denunciation of the German-Polish treaty, their guarantee to Poland has not become more risky than it previously was and more risky than London had foreseen."

(The editorial's allusion was to the denunciation by Hitler last Friday of the 1935 Anglo-German naval accord and the 1934 treaty of nonaggression between Germany and Poland.)

Other commentators said "England acted on false Polish information" and that "publication of the German proposals (concerning Danzig and the Polish Corridor) shows that Poland was not menaced."

Civilian Controls Demanded For Growing U.S. War Machine

Foreign Policy Association Holds Checks Are Essential for Soundness of America's Democracy; Defenses Considered Adequate

By William V. Nessly,

Congressional leaders yesterday prepared to advance still further this week the vast national defense program, while there came from another source a call for maintenance of "proper civilian controls over the waxing military machine" the Nation is creating.

Amid Capitol Hill resentment of Reichsfuehrer Hitler's public spurning of President Roosevelt's plea for a peace pledge, the complex defense-foreign policy situation presented this picture:

The expiration date (May 1) for "cash and carry" provisions of the present neutrality act arrived with no agreement in Congress on what the neutrality policy is to be.

Speed Navy Supply Bill

House leaders arranged to bring up this week the naval supply bill which would provide funds to start work on two 45,000-ton super-dreadnaughts and to start a far-flung naval base program.

Holding that military measures adopted to date are "more than sufficient" to defend the United States, the Foreign Policy Association said "it should be openly admitted that the armed forces represent an essential element in the pursuit of power politics."

David H. Popper, who prepared the association report, suggested creation of a commission, with representatives of the army, the navy, State Department, Congress and the public, to make a "comprehensive survey of American defense policy as it is related to American foreign policy."

"In a crucial period of American history," he wrote, " a commission of this type may aid in clarifying the confusion surrounding the subject of national defense. It may suggest changes which would produce a more efficient fighting force with a more definite function. Above all, it may maintain in full vigor proper civilian controls over the waxing military machine which the civil arm has created. In a world in which military supremacy and Spartan preparedness tend to become ends in themselves, and the competitive hysteria of the arms race is all too apparent, the preservation of such controls may ultimately prove essential for the soundness of American democracy."

U. S. "Could Repel Axis"

The United States Navy, he wrote, on the basis of battleship strength, now could repel an attack by the combined fleets of Germany, Italy and Japan, should the remote possibility of the three powers being able to join their fleets ever come to pass. In addition to battleship strength, the report said, the soon-to-be-realized carrier-based capacity of 560 Navy war planes is greater than the three axis powers combined could utilize against the United States.

Declaring that the contemplated force of 8,500 Army and Navy planes "certainly . . . is not necessary for defensive purposes," Popper held that "it is only on the hypothesis that the seizure of a land base in the Americas is imminent that the remotest aerial threat to American security now exists."

Discussing the effect of the armed forces on "power politics," he continued:

"The diplomatic implications of the development of Guam, for example, far outweigh the direct military consequences at this stage of events. Similarly, the expansion of the American aircraft industry, which may conceivably constitute a vital source of supply for European democracies, has a direct effect on the policies of those states."

Popper said "the very existence of forces of the magnitude now planned makes possible their use in overseas conflicts," and pointed to the "valid" demand of military officers that, once war starts, the military operations be extended to the enemy's territory. "The plans for an American mass army in wartime," he added, "are clearly designed for this eventuality."

Plan Isn't Reprehensible"

There is nothing "reprehensible" in such a plan, he continued, "provided its existence is clear to all." But he said it was important "that the American public exercise its right to limit the almost endlessly increasing demands of the services whenever it sees fit to do so, and scrutinize all military developments from the point of view of the efficient expenditure of public funds."

"Unfortunately," he added, "over a period of years civilian control of American military policy has become less and less effective . . . A busy Congress now scarcely questions more military expenditures."

Meanwhile, Senator Pittman, of Nevada, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, called for enactment of new neutrality legislation "so the world may know what our position will be."

The "cash and carry" provisions expiring today apply to products aside from munitions, authorizing the President to place an embargo on such items in case of war abroad. Not expiring are the clauses empowering the President to declare a state of war exists between other powers and to embargo munitions to belligerents.

Pittman's own neutrality proposal would permit belligerents to purchase all supplies here by paying cash and transporting the purchases themselves.

War Held Too Costly

"Neutrality legislation may require a little commercial sacrifice," he said, "but this is not to be compared with the loss of lives in war, hundreds of thousands of blind and maimed and the $40,000,000,000 of debt which represent the aftermath of our insistence upon international law in 1917."

Senate and House committees will conclude their neutrality hearings this week. Any legislation recommended is certain to face a floor fight.

Duce, in Parley, Seeks to Sway Rumanians

Sees Gafencu in Effort to Outbid England and France

By International News Service.

Rome, April 30.—Premier Mussolini tonight received Rumanian Foreign Minister Gafencu in furtherance of the Italo-German drive to frustrate completion of Europe's "grand peace alliance" by outbidding Britain and France for the friendship of smaller powers.

Il Duce engaged Gafencu in an hour-long conversation shortly after the Rumanian statesman, who has been in Berlin, London and Paris, arrived in Rome on his tour of capitals.

Earlier Mussolini conferred with Reichsfuehrer Hitler's army chief, Col. Gen. Walther von Brauchitsch, who arrived in Rome last night for talks designed to revise joint Italo-German military plans to suit them to the latest developments, particularly British conscription.

Talks With Pariani

Von Brauchitsch also talked with Undersecretary of War Gen. Alberto Pariani, chief of staff of the Italian army, after the German army commander had paid his respects to King-Emperor Victor Emmanuel.

Foreign Minister Ciano was believed prepared for an intensive effort to persuade Rumania to abstain from any two-way military pact with Great Britain and to gravitate instead toward closer harmony with the Rome-Berlin combine.

Just a week ago today, Ciano in talks with Foreign Minister Cinca-Markovitch succeeded in swerving Yugoslavia to greater co-operation with the axis. Yugoslavia is the Balkan Entente partner of Rumania. The entente also includes Greece, recipient of a recent military pledge from Britain, and Turkey, for whose favor Germany and Russia are now competing at Ankara.

Reich Won Concessions

Germany already has won concessions in Rumania through a recently concluded economic treaty. It was believed Italy would try to complete this process by pointing out Yugoslavia's vulnerable position since the Italian military occupation of Albania, a factor which reduces the value of Yugoslavia as an ally of Rumania.

Von Brauchitsch, it was understood, may leave Rome tomorrow on his scheduled journey to Libya for inspection of Fascist North African garrisons and talks with Marshal Balbo, governor of Libya.

Italy Gives Warning

Rome, April 30 (AP).—The Italian government indicated today it was preparing to take action against foreign Jews who have stayed in Italy after expiration of the March 12 time limit for their departure under racial laws.

Russia to Parade Armed Might In Huge May Day Celebration

Communist Internationale in Appeal Calls on Workers Throughout World to Overthrow Oppressors

By the Associated Press.

Moscow, April 30.—The Communist International issued an appeal today to workers of all countries to "unite now for the overthrow of their oppressors" as Soviet Russia's 170 millions prepared to celebrate the fiftieth international May Day tomorrow.

Asserting that Fascism "like a mad beast, runs amok over Europe," the appeal continued:

"British and French reactionaries are paying now for their policy of war provocation against the U.S.S.R.

"With great obedience they opened the doors of Austria and Czecho-Slovakia to the Fascists in order to push them toward the east. They permitted Fascism to take Spanish ores, Austrian and Czecho-Slovak gold reserves, the Skoda munitions plants, Rumanian oil and Hungarian wheat in order to strengthen the Fascist aggressors for war against the country of Soviets.

"But they have exercised spirits which now have turned against them. The indignation of the masses grows against the policy of Munich and against those who led peoples into war under the hypocritical banner of saving peace."

Defense of the Soviet Union will be one of the keynotes of the May Day celebrations, symbolized in a great parade of the armed forces in Moscow.

Joseph Stalin will stand atop Lenin's Tomb in Red Square and review the march of thousands of troops and hundreds of thousands of civilians. Tanks and artillery will rumble across the square while warplanes roar overhead.

The Comintern appeal advised workers that "fascism will not fall of its own weight. The workers must act."

It proposed an international conference of workers' organizations "in order to work out a concrete plan of action."

Communist party membership outside the Soviet Union now aggregates 1,200,000 persons and the Young Communist Leagues in foreign countries have 746,000 members. Each member of this international army of approximately 2,000,000 persons is believed here to be the "leader of from 15 to 20 workers who vote or act communist."

Less stress than formerly is laid on the aim of world revolution, but foreign communists who look to Stalin as their leader are expected to render vital aid in case the Soviet Union is attacked.

Paris Labor Unions Parade

Paris, April 30 (AP).—Labor union members in the Paris region celebrated May Day today with parades and public meetings and without calling for the usual May 1 cessation of work tomorrow.

The Sunday observance resulted from an executive order of the General Confederation of Labor, canceling the annual 24-hour May 1 layoff.

Speakers at mass meetings of union members in the Bois de Vincennes assailed Finance Minister Reynaud's new decree laws increasing taxation and lengthening working hours. Others urged reestablishment of the 40-hour week but acknowledged longer working schedules were necessary temporarily in the interests of national defense.

Chinese Airmen Shoot Down Four Japanese Planes

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Shanghai, April 30.—China's rejuvenated air force raided Japanese military bases in Shansi and Shensi provinces yesterday, shooting down four Japanese planes in three encounters. The Chinese lost one plane.

Official sources at Chungking, Chinese provisional capital, today denied reports in the Chinese press that Chinese forces had recaptured Nanchang.

Chungking, Monday, May 1 (U.P.).—Chiang Kai-shek will broadcast to the nation today urging expansion of the "war of resistance" against Japan.

It was understood he would deny widespread reports that Britain and France were sounding out Nationalist authorities for a possible settlement of the war.

Reports of a change in the attitude of Britain and France persisted, apparently based on rumors Japan had obtained concessions from London and Paris in return for her refusal to enter military alliance with Germany.

Gandhi Faction Wins India Party Election

Bombay, India, April 30 (AP).—Dr. Rajendra Prasad was elected president of the All-India Congress Party today, marking a complete triumph for supporters of Mahatma Gandhi.

Dr. Prasad, a strong Gandhi backer and president of the party in 1934, was elected after Subhas Chanbra Bose resigned when he failed to win Gandhi's aid in naming a new working committee.

Arabs Offer British Plan Aimed At Ending Palestine Riots

By the Associated Press.

Cairo, Egypt, April 30.—Arab leaders of Egypt, Palestine, Iraq, Saudi Arabia and Trans-Jordan concluded a two-day conference today on the latest British proposals for settlement of the Palestine problem.

They handed the details of their observations to British Ambassador Sir Miles Lampson for transmission to London.

Their observations were not made public but it was understood that if they were accepted by the British government the Arab states were prepared to pledge themselves to recommend that Palestine Arabs co-operate in carrying out the British policy and cease disturbances.

British Also Secretive

Britain's proposals were secret also but were understood to include full independence for Palestine after a ten-year transition period in which Arabs and Jews would have an opportunity to become accustomed to joint self-government. Jewish immigration would be limited to 15,000 persons annually for five years and then stopped entirely.

Palestine now is held by Britain under a League of Nations mandate.

British proposals were reported to include amendments to Britain's "final plan" to establish an Arab-dominated state with Jews as a minority.

Accepted by Cabinet

This "final plan" was reported accepted by the British cabinet on March 15 after the failure of the Palestine conference to reach an agreement. Both Jews and Arabs rejected the scheme.

The "final plan" was formulated after violent reaction was aroused by a royal commission's recommendation that Palestine be split up into three areas, Arab, Jewish, and British.

Arab-Jewish difficulties had resulted in strife throughout the Holy Land. Disorders in the six-month period ending April 1 brought death to 970 persons and injury to 1,106.

Bund Says Roosevelt Insulted Dictators

Andover, N. J., April 30 (AP).—A German-American Bund leader asserted today that President Roosevelt's recent plea for a pledge against aggression was "an insult" to Hitler and Mussolini.

William Kunze, Bund public relations director, addressed a crowd gathered in the Sussex County hills for the opening of the third season on the Bund's Camp Nordland.

"It is an insult to . . . the greatest talker and thinker that Europe has ever produced (Hitler)," Kunze said to the accompaniment of Nazi salutes.

British, Turks Reported in Secret Pact

Plan Arranges Defense Of East Mediterranean; Channel Isle Fortified

By the United Press.

London, April 30.—Great Britain tonight was understood to have ordered the fortification of Alderney, northernmost of the channel islands, as a "second Gibraltar."

Simultaneously, diplomats heard that Britain and Turkey had perfected a secret plan to resist Italian aggression at the eastern end of the Mediterranean and further bolster Europe's armed "peace front."

Developments indicated that Britain's immediate fears are centered on the Mediterranean—already crowded with the warships of Germany, Italy, Britain and France—although a grave view is taken of Reichsfuehrer Hitler's flat demand for Danzig and a motor road across the Polish corridor.

Turkey Waits on Russia

Turkey's adherence to the alignment against Nazi-Fascist aggression was said to be dependent upon enlistment of Russia's active cooperation in the "peace front."

The Anglo-Soviet-Turkish situation will be examined tomorrow at a meeting of the British cabinet, summoned by Prime Minister Chamberlain to study the European situation in the light of Hitler's renunciation of the Polish-German treaty of non-aggression.

Foreign Secretary Viscount Halifax and Soviet Ambassador Maisky, in conference yesterday, agreed to omit the Far Eastern question from their "peace front" negotiations, it was revealed officially.

Chinese Hopes Dashed

Britain opposed inclusion of anti-Japanese commitments because of fear such a move would drive the Japanese to accept Hitler's proposals for transforming the Italo-German-Japanese pact again communism into an outright military alliance.

The decision dashed previous indications that an anti-aggression pledge might be given to China, based on Chamberlain's April 19 statement to the House of Commons that the government would "bear in mind the desirability of including China and other Far-Eastern countries in any combination for the purpose of resisting aggression."

Halifax was reliably understood to have promised a reply "within a few days" to Maisky's demand for extension of the Anglo-French military entente to include Russia.

Mutual Defense Pledged

Chamberlain was expected to inform the cabinet that Britain, although anxious for a peaceful settlement of the Danzig and corridor dispute, is determined to stand by her pledge of armed aid to the Poles in event they are forced to fight in defense of their frontiers.

Diplomats in London understood the secret Anglo-Turkish plan to cope with any surprises sprung by the Rome-Berlin axis powers, particularly Italy, provides:

Britain to give Turkey full armed support in case of an Italian threat to Turkish independence which the Turks would resist.

Turkey to grant maximum assistance to Britain in event of an Italian aggression against Egypt or Palestine.

To Keep Dardanelles Open

Regardless of the limits of the July 20, 1936, Montreux convention, limiting foreign warships passing through the Dardanelles to a total of 40,000 tons, Turkey would refrain from an "undue restriction" of movements of the British fleet to and from the Black Sea in a "war against aggression."

Turkey promised to aid Rumania if Bulgaria should try to regain forcibly Rumania's southern Dobrudja region, taken from Bulgaria after the World War.

It was understood Turkey requested Britain to treat the arrangements as confidential and insisted that they are contingent, in operation, upon Russia's inclusion in the anti-aggression front.

Thus, Britain was faced with the necessity of finding some sort of a compromise with the Soviets if the Anglo-Turkish agreement is to be made available for emergency use.

France, drawn even closer to Britain by Hitler's Friday speech, was reported to be pressing for a close military alliance between Poland and Rumania to bulwark the "peace front."

Warsaw and Bucharest already have a mutual defense pact, aimed originally at possible Soviet aggression but now applicable to any German thrust.

The government's reported decision to convert Alderney, a rocky island three and one-half miles long and nine miles off the French coast, into a naval and air force stronghold, was significant in view of the cruise to Spain by 40 units of the German fleet.

The fortification of Alderney would protect shipping in the English Channel to the north in event of war and give added protection to transport of British troops to the continent. At the same time it would provide protection to the Bay of Biscay on the south, along the lifeline of the British empire.

It was understood arrangements have already been made for expansion of the present airfield at Alderney to provide a base from which reconnaisance planes could scan the sea for submarines between the coasts of Britain and France and southward to Gibraltar.

Pledges Offered Hitler

Paris, April 30 (U.P.).—Great Britain and France have offered to exchange non-aggression pledges with Germany in hopes of achieving a peaceful solution of Germany's grievances, British diplomats in Paris reported tonight.

In his Friday Reichstag speech Reichsfuehrer Hitler said Germany was ready to negotiate a non-aggression pact with any nation "on condition of absolute reciprocity . . ."

It appeared doubtful, however, whether Britain and France had made formal offers. It was more likely they were in the form of diplomatic soundings by the British and French envoys in Berlin.

No answer has reached London or Paris from Hitler, but it was contended that, regardless of whether Der Fuehrer accepts the offers, they will stand as proof that Britain and France have no desire to "encircle" Germany and Italy, as the dictators charge.

Russia Seeks Turkish Pledge To Bar Dardanelles to Enemies

By International News Service.

Ankara, Turkey, April 30.—A series of conferences that may go a long way toward deciding success or failure of the Anglo-French campaign to build a new European security system was opened formally at Ankara today.

May Decide Soviet Stand

Vladimir Potemkin, Soviet vice commissar for foreign affairs, met Turkey's leaders, headed by Foreign Minister Sukru Saracoglu, in an attempt to adjust Soviet-Turkish relations to the new conditions arising from Europe's ferment.

In addition to striving for closer bilateral ties between Turkey and Russia, Potemkin sought to ascertain extent to which the Turks would be willing to co-operate with or participate in the projected "peace alliance" being promoted by Great Britain.

Degree of the Soviet Union's participation in the antitotalitarian bloc depends in large part on the answer to this vital question.

Guarantee Is Desired

For Turkey stands as the sentinel of the Dardanelles, back door to the U. S. S. R, linking the Mediterranean with the Black Sea. In consequence, it was understood Potemkin's chief objective was to elicit from Turkey a pledge that Germany and Italy will not be permitted passage to the Black Sea in the event Russia becomes involved in war by reason of commitments the Soviets shortly are expected to make to the western democracies.

Such a pledge from Turkey might be enough to induce the Soviet union finally to enter into the projected Anglo-French-Russian entente envisaged as the nucleus of the whole "peace alliance."

Even though Turkey, for fear of provoking the Rome-Berlin axis, might choose to remain aloof from the alliance, its guarantee to keep the Dardanelles closed to Italo-German warships, while allowing passage by Russian vessels into the Mediterranean, would be almost equivalent to Turkish participation.

In the World War many ships, guns and men were expended by Britain in futile attempts to blast a way through the virtually impregnable Dardanelles. Britain, France and Russia are keenly desirous of preventing Turkey from allying herself again with Germany in case of a second world war.

To counter these efforts, Reichsfuehrer Hitler has sent his ace diplomatic trouble-shooter, Baron Franz von Papen, to Ankara as German Ambassador.

by the reciprocal agreement between Britain and Poland › help defend each other's independence, it was believed eck would contend that Germany herself was encircling Poland by her seizure of Memel and creation of protectorate over Slovakia.

Exiled Leaders Return

The rally of political leaders to support of the government despite former differences continued with the return to Poland of Wojciech Korfanty, leading Polish member of the Reichstag before the World War. He fled Poland a few years ago after disagreeing with the late Marshal Pilsudski.

It was expected he would be pardoned, like many other dissident leaders who have pledged loyalty to the government in the present issue.

Casimir Kowalski, president of the National Democrats Party, declared at a party convention today that "a European war is unavoidable because of Germany's imperialistic plans."

Kowalski, whose party is particularly strong in western Poland, asserted Germany's plans are concerned not only with Central and eastern Europe but also with Belgium, the Netherlands, Switzerland, Scandinavia, northern France, the British Isles and even Italy.

"The German problem must be settled in such a way that Germans no longer endanger European nations," he said.

Poles' Defiance Hardens

Warsaw, April 30 (U.P.).—Announcement tonight that Polish troops along the German frontier cannot be withdrawn for participation in the Polish—Independence Day parade Wednesday, "because they have other duties," confirmed the extent of Poland's readiness to resist any German thrust.

Polish defiance of Reichsfuehrer Hitler hardened during the day.

Hundreds of thousands watched air force displays over 12 principal cities, staged in connection with the Government's propaganda for public subscription of the new $120,000,000 home defense loan being floated by means of "baby" bonds.

Origin of anti-Hitler posters which appeared in many cities was not revealed.

The government is understood to have more than 1,200,000 troops under arms. Most of them are at frontier posts along the Polish Corridor and in the vicinity of Danzig.

A Notable Record

Long before the New Deal was ever dreamed of, the National Popular Government League under the able guidance of Judson King, its director from the very beginning, was engaged in a nonpartisan battle for reforms designed to improve the lot of the American people.

Many of these reforms were regarded as utopian or dangerous when first advocated but have since been enacted into law and have won the approval even of those who originally opposed them. Other proposals urged by the League continue to be the battleground of controversy, their wisdom and practicability regarded by many as distinctly open to doubt. But whether right or wrong on specific issues, the good faith of the League, its democratic motivation, its genuinely liberal outlook, have never been open to question.

On Saturday, the League celebrated its twenty-fifth anniversary. It could look back on a notable record. It has many constructive achievements to its credit. But the greatest of all is that, in season and out, in boom times and in depression years, the League has vigorously called the people's attention to the existence of important national problems and the need for grappling with them. It is these educational and organizational efforts which are the League's outstanding accomplishment.

The National Popular Government League and its public-spirited director are to be congratulated on the completion of 25 years of fruitful effort which their many well-wishers hope will only mark the beginning of a new period of constructive achievement.

Trade And Gold

International trade is affected by so many factors—political as well as economic—that the interpretation of trends is extremely difficult, if not impossible. Furthermore, there is always a danger of mistaking short-time trade movements for long-time trends.

For example, when our merchandise export balance declined in 1936, to the insignificant figure of $33,000,000, a good many analysts assumed that this development represented a continuing trend. A creditor nation, such as the United States, it was pointed out, is bound, in the long run, to import more than she exports.

Yet last year, the Department of Commerce reports, we exported $1,133,000,000 more merchandise than we purchased from abroad—the largest so-called favorable balance in 17 years. And while, during the first three months of the current year, the excess of exports has been greatly reduced as compared with the corresponding period a year ago, it is, nevertheless, a very large figure.

It is comparatively easy to explain how the huge export surplus of last year arose. That surplus was not due to any increase in our exports, the value of which actually declined somewhat as compared with 1937. It was the result of a sharp drop in the value of our import trade, attributable to a domestic business recession which cut down our buying of foreign raw materials, and to cessation of buying to supplement crop shortages. A drop in wholesale commodity prices also accounted for some of the shrinkage.

So much has been said about the necessity of importing in order to supply foreigners with the resources for purchasing our goods, that one may well wonder how we have succeeded of late in selling such huge amounts of goods against which there are no offsetting imports. The answer to that question is supplied by the statistics of gold and silver imports. In 1938, for example, net gold and silver imports amounted to $1,864,000,000, with gold imports alone totaling $1,840,000,000. These huge metal shipments not only provided means of payment for a record excess of exports but enabled foreigners to increase their capital holdings in this country to the extent of several hundred million dollars.

Since the beginning of this year the gold inflow has been greatly accelerated. The abnormal conditions which have operated to bring this gold to our shores have confounded the prophets who predicted that our creditor status would necessitate increased importing and result, ultimately, in the substitution of an import for an export balance.

But we have no occasion to rejoice over their discomfiture. For the longer we continue to exchange useful goods and valuable claims to property for gold and silver that piles up in useless hoards, the more insistent becomes the question of how long this kind of an exchange can or should continue.

Important Witness

The most important witness to be heard by the Congressional committees that have been looking into the question of revision of the neutrality act did not appear before those committees at all. But Adolf Hitler is a witness none the less.

The ostensible purpose of the existing neutrality law is to make American involvement in war less probable. But in the two years since that law was placed on the statute books, the threat of war so far as this Nation is concerned has steadily increased. To this our mounting preparedness expenditure bears testimony.

For this unhappy state of affairs many factors are responsible. But one factor which Americans cannot ignore is that our neutrality law has definitely encouraged aggression and thereby rendered more probable a war in which the United States is likely to be involved. The present law gives aggressors assurance that this country will be wholly tolerant and will offer no effective objection if they lay violent hands on the structure of peace.

Despite the neutrality law, however, our moral influence has of late been exerted to condemn aggression. And it is becoming steadily more probable that in the event of war our material resources will be made available to the victims of a premeditated and inexcusable attack.

This trend of thinking could be read between the lines of the President's appeal to the dictators for a ten-year pledge of peace. The appeal did not ask Italy or Germany to give up anything they already have. It held out to them and to all other nations of the world the very considerable advantages that would follow inevitably on the institution of a regime of real peace in the world. But in seeking to achieve a constructive solution it intimated that those responsible for war will inevitably be held accountable.

Hitler has rejected the President's plea. But the elaborate pains he took to explain why he found Mr. Roosevelt's plan unsuitable is a pointed tribute to the influence which the United States can wield. The circumstance that an enormous volume of American public opinion regards the present neutrality law as harmful, and is demanding its revision, must certainly be known in Berlin and may have played a considerable part in giving Hitler pause.

In other words, the probability that the United States will free its hands of the fetters of mandatory neutrality has proved a factor for peace. But that probability is not yet realized.

If the United States is to continue to play a constructive role in preserving the peace, the hands of the Administration in this field must actually be freed. The neutrality law must be very sharply modified, or repealed altogether, except for such useful provisions as the one establishing the Munitions Control Board. The expiration today of the cash-and-carry provision makes such action all the more urgent. If that is not done, it will be tantamount to a signal to the dictators again to leave us out of their calculations, to reckon on what they consider our sympathetic attitude to go ahead.

"Since When It Grows—"

They say that the man-eating shark has many admirable qualities that are quite obscured by his propensity for biting off whatever human arms and legs happen to come within range of his jaws. But perhaps an even more striking illustration of what a bad name will do for an animal is the skunk—a very handsome little beast and apparently quite affectionate and companionable when you really get to know him.

Up in Paterson, N. J., for instance, 10-year-old Junior Quinn and his mother had a pet skunk, Snooky by name, that they loved devotedly. Snooky is now sulking under a bathhouse somewhere in Garret Mountain Park Reservation and the Quinns would give the world if they could only persuade him to come home again.

It was, perhaps, unfortunate that the Quinns should get the idea of showing off Snooky in the Youth Week Pet Show. It was the first time that a skunk had been entered in this show and there were some who did not take kindly to the idea. Apparently nobody went out of his way to make Snooky feel welcome. So when a pointer belonging to little Alice Hardifer began sniffing at him suspiciously, Snooky seems to have reached the conclusion that he wasn't wanted. So he jumped from Junior's shoulder and fled.

But this was not before he had made an impression upon the hundred-odd children, parents and judges that was as profound as it was unhappy. It was an open-air show but it had to be hastily moved to another part of the outdoors. Even then, though the judges went bravely on to the end, it was obvious that the party had been ruined. Nobody seemed able to get the unfortunate Snooky out of his mind.

Perhaps the only moral to be drawn from this sad story is that in animals or men a single bad trait can do more to shape a reputation than a whole battery of virtues. The criminal records are full of instances of men whose lives were exemplary in all respects save a regrettable tendency to homicide. And consider, too, those unhappy people in the soap and mouthwash advertisements. One little shortcoming—one petty fault—is enough to lead them, handsome and clever as they invariably are, into blind alleys of frustration and despair.

Germany Tries Inflation

In an authoritarian state, such as Germany, financial problems can be handled much more cavalierly than in a democratically governed country. Officials armed with dictatorial powers can manipulate the monetary and credit mechanism to serve ulterior ends. And they can exact sacrifices from taxpayers that would cause a free people to riot.

For that reason, it is especially significant that the Nazi government has heeded popular protests against imposition of an additional income tax levy. According to reports from Berlin, the special supertax on incomes is to be cut from 30 to 15 per cent and the measure liberalized in other respects. This retreat shows very clearly that there are limits to the sacrifices which even an all-powerful political overlord may demand of a subservient people.

The modification of the tax is important for another reason. The lower rates and more generous exemptions will result in a loss of anticipated tax receipts that would have helped to offset the inflationary effects of the tax certificates to be issued under the government's new financial plan. These certificates bearing no interest can be proffered in payment of 40 per cent of the amounts due to firms working on government contracts. Moreover, they may be similarly employed in private transactions. Ultimately the certificates will be returned to the government in full payment of taxes.

Tax anticipation certificates are not a Nazi invention, of course, but a well-known device enabling governments to obtain revenue by borrowing in advance of tax collections. But when these certificates are issued to firms with claims against the government and even made a legal tender in payment of public and private debts, a recognized financial expedient becomes a very dubious kind of forced loan,

Reliance upon short-term financing, whether in the form of tax certificates or issuance of interest-bearing short-term obligations, is dangerous for a country in the position of Germany. The deposed Dr. Schacht's warnings to that effect have, however, fallen on deaf ears.

His successor, Dr. Funk, has proceeded with a plan which appears to lay the basis for a new and quite obvious kind of currency inflation. For, according to Otto D. Tolischus, it is generally believed that the tax certificates will be issued in "tremendous amounts." That means, of course, that when they are offered in lieu of cash to pay taxes, the government will be compelled to look about for new sources of income. Under present conditions the temptation to keep on issuing promises to pay will probably prove irresistible.

Germany seems to have reached a stage at which she is being balked in her search for new revenue obtained by taxation or appeals to investors. The only alternative left, if that is indeed the situation, is resort to some form of inflation. Inflationary financing in effect takes private property for public use without the consent and often without the knowledge of the victim.

In an authoritarian state rising prices may be prevented by price control, and the hardships of commodity shortages may be alleviated by rationing. Hence, the average man does not immediately perceive that an unsound governmental financial structure due to excessive spending directly affects his own well-being. But given time, even the best camflouaged form of inflation cannot be hidden nor its evil consequences averted.

Family Names

From the Des Moines Register.

The old order does not always change, yielding place to new. Sometimes the old and new orders dwell side by side. For instance, social security laws in the United States obviously belong to the new order, but in the 40,000,000 names listed by the Social Security Board the old order remains.

First in order comes the Smiths with more than 480,000 names. Next are the Johnsons with almost 360,000 names, the Browns and the Williamses with approximately 250,000 each, and the Millers and Joneses not far behind.

America's six "leading families" are very much what they have been for a long time. They are still Smith, Johnson, Brown, Williams, Miller and Jones. Lest it be thought that the Social Security Board roster is not complete, it may be mentioned that the list covers names as short as "E" and as long as Xenogianokopopulos.

The members of our six "leading families" comprise about 1,500,000 out of 40,000,000 names on the Social Security Board rolls. This means that about 96 out of every 100 Americans have some other name.

Still we refer to the representative anonymous American as Mr. Smith or Mrs. Jones. We are not likely to ask rhetorically what John "E" thinks of the new taxes. And no one ordinarily would speak of "keeping up with the Xenogianokopopuloses."

Letters To The Editor

The Rockville Incident

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In the April 24th issue of The Washington Post, you have a very misleading article under the heading, "Lights Turned Out to Block Rockville Riot Over Nazism." If this is not rectified by your paper, it will tend to put Jehovah's Witnesses in a false light in the eyes of your readers.

On April 22, 84 of Jehovah's Witnesses advertised this meeting by means of sandwich parades and hand bills. The police interfered and stated that a license was required for any parade in the town of Rockville, and stated that if the license had been requested it would have been denied.

On Sunday, April 23, the time scheduled for the meeting, about 50 of Jehovah's Witnesses and their friends arrived to hear the speech. About four or five police officers and some city officials also attended the lecture, and the only interference was by the police themselves. They stated that no one would be allowed to say anything about the Roman Catholic hierarchy in Rockville. The police cut off the electric power, and thereby stopped this peaceable assembly of Christian people in that town.

It seems to me that your article condoning the police department is very wrong and un-American. The article should have read something like "Rockville Police Act Like German Nazis, Preventing Free Bible Lecture in Rockville."

This speech was "Fascism or Freedom," and was originally delivered in Mecca Temple in New York, and broadcast by more than 50 radio stations in America.

The Recreation Guide

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It is with a great deal of interest and pleasure that I have reviewed the Recreation Guide which The Post has just published.

I feel very definitely that this is probably the finest contribution that we have had made to Washington in this line.

Not only is it beautifully compiled, but there is also a fine job shown in the printing.

Thank you.

VIRGINIA V. LEE,
Vice Chairman Recreation Committee.

Appreciation

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: For the last two weeks I have been trying to get a few minutes to send you a word of very sincere thanks for the two splendid Georgetown articles by Mr. Folliard which appeared in the Sunday editions of The Post. I have heard many fine compliments on them from our alumni, and I know that they have been a source of great pleasure to all Georgetown men and their friends. I regret very much that I am so late in expressing my thanks.

On Admitting Refugee Children

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In her column on the Wagner-Rogers "child refugee" immigration bill, Miss Dorothy Thompson used some arguments for the bill which are open to question.

As long as Miss Thompson sticks to the argument of the high quality of the young immigrants she is pretty convincing, but when she begins to suggest that we need these young immigrants to expand our population, she is trailing along with her "good friends" Hitler and Mussolini. Says Miss Thompson:

"For years the vital statisticians of this country have been pointing out that the falling birth rate is a cause for concern. This Nation, occupying the better part of a whole continent, and containing only 130,000,000 people, is rapidly ceasing to have an expanding population, will soon have a stable one, and after that may be expected to decline unless there is fresh immigration."

There is no vital statistician in this country or abroad who can prove that this country needs one single immigrant, as far as quantity of population is concerned. If Miss Thompson will travel through the Southern and Great Plains States, she will find not 20,000, but some 2,000,000 American children who need the support and education which she says the immigrant children would receive if they were admitted to this country. And perhaps another 2,000,000 American children that need such care could be found in the slums of our large cities.

Miss Thompson tells us that "children under 14, therefore, fall into the age group which is most desirable for immigration, according to the vital statisticians." But the very fact that the number of births in this country has averaged more than two million and a quarter a year for more than 14 years, strongly suggests that there is no need for additions through immigration. If, in this day and age, we can healthfully support and properly educate the children we have below the age of 14 years, we shall be doing exceptionally well.

Another argument which Miss Thompson uses is that "the average age of the population is increasing, and under the new old-age pension legislation a large burden will have to be borne by the young."

Furthermore, it may be shown that even if our birth rate decreases as much as one-third, we shall have in 1980 a larger proportion of our population in the productive-age group and a smaller proportion in the dependent-age groups, than at the present time. Added to this that we have, and are likely to have for some time, more youths than we can profitably employ, and this argument of Miss Thompson's disappears to thin air.

If we want to let in 20,000 young "non-Aryan" immigrants (on top of the more than 50,000 immigrants we are already admitting) for purely humanitarian reasons, well and good, although charity should begin at home. But let us not jolly ourselves into believing that we really need them.

G. I. B.
Washington, April 26.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I would like an explanation from Dorothy Thompson as to what she means by the statement reported in The Post of April 23, in regard to admitting 20,000 German children to this country when she says, "We need young workers in this country."

We do not need more workers when we can not take care of those we have, and certainly our fine American youth should have every door of opportunity opened to them first and always.

I think America has a big job to take care of her own youth who need employment and at this time 20,000 more would only add to the suffering and deprivation which so many of them are enduring.

MARY G. SIMPSON.
Chevy Chase, Md., April 26.

Law Schools

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A bill, S. 1610, before the Senate Committee on Civil Service would forbid a Federal Government agency to discriminate in hiring people for legal work because an applicant:

(1) Has not been graduated from a particular law school;

(2) Has not been graduated from a law school which is of a particular class or which has been approved or accredited by an association, organization or group; or

(3) Has not had college training in addition to law school training, or who acquired his legal education in law office.

The law schools of the District are bitterly propagandizing for and against the bill, depending in large part on which side of the argument their butter is to be found.

This battle overlooks a far bigger issue—shall any private schools, or groups of schools, be given such a monopoly on "education" that one, to get official recognition must be able to make extremely large expenditures for tuition? Such a procedure is highly undemocratic.

Having attended various colleges for ten years, taught for a few semesters, and having specialized to some extent in educational psychology and testing technique, I feel I am not totally unqualified to venture the opinion that if one shows he can master a certain amount of knowledge of collegiate grade, by hmiself, he ought not be forced to attend college.

The Federal Government could, for example, prepare very comprehensive, rigorous and comparatively objective law exams in each law subject; periodically these would be given at cost, and if an individual passed a given number of these exams, he would be granted the right to take the bar. All would have to take these exams whether attending a law school or not. Each person could decide upon his own method of studying for the exams. If he felt school attendance were necessary, it is not inconceivable that he would act accordingly.

Borah's Position

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Newspaper and radio commentators have recently charcterized Senator Borah, as a "veteran isolationist" and warmly commended him for his "consistency" in reminding his fellow countrymen of Washington's warning against embroilment in European quarrels.

It is true that the able and distinguished Senator from Idaho has been an isolationist since 1919, but it certainly is not true that he has always been a consistent upholder of the first President's admonition against foreign entanglements. For in 1917, he defiantly disregarded that warning when he earnestly advocted this country's entrance into the World War in a speech in which he declared that life on this planet would not be worth living if the Germans won.

Senator Borah should have known that not even superficially is the present situation like that in 1914-18. Today democracy and the whole democratic order in Europe and throughout the world are challenged and threatened. For over four years the totalitarian dictators have openly and repeatedly declared that their object was to destroy democratic institutions.

This open warfare on democracy has aroused the defensive instincts of all democratic governments and statesmen. They are uniting and arming for what may well be this generation's "irrepressible conflict." Senator Borah gave some recognition to the ominous implications of the crisis when he said in a recent interview that he sympathized with the purpose of President Roosevelt's message to the dictators. But he hastened to add that he was free to say that, had he been President, he would not have sent such a message to them.

The Fairies' Hour

WHEN OLD MEN sit, full of the heaviness of the fields, beside the griddle at nightfall in rural Ireland, they sometimes talk of fairies and of the faeries' hour—"the strangest hour in the year"—that lies 'twixt sunset on May Eve and sunrise on May morning. But if, as they talk, the wind outside makes music in the trees; if a sudden gust through the half-door whirls the leaves and straws as it passes, then will they take their hats off and say "God bless them" softly and fall silent and draw their sugan chairs closer to the comfort of the glowing turf.

Only when the music ceases, the gust dies, will slow conversation be resumed. Then someone will whisper (what everybody there knows) that the "good people" are abroad; and someone else will tell the story of Paudh Beag ("God rest his soul") who lived in the next parish and who, having had an extra drop—"to keep out the cold, the poor man"—strayed into an enchanted hovel and was put to work turning a corpse one May Eve night on a spit before the fire. Nobody, of course, grows anxious about Paudh during the telling. Each listener knows the story's end—how Paudh awakes in the midst of a green field with the dew of the dawn on his crumpled coat.

Who are these faery people that, in Ireland at least, have been known to give gifts to the kindly, plague the churlish? "The gods of the earth," says the Book of Armagh. "The gods of pagan Ireland," answer the Irish antiquarians, "the Tuatha de Danan, who, when no longer worshiped and fed with offerings, dwindled away in the popular imagination and now are only a few spans high." "The children of the fiend," thunders the rural pastor, "who have power over mortals until the end of time when God shall fight with them a great pitched battle and hack them into pieces."

But the peasants who have a timid affection for their unseen neighbors and who never call them anything but the "gentry" or else "daoine maithe," which is Gaelic for "good people," whisper—"They are the fallen angels who were not good enough to be saved, nor bad enough to be lost." And there the matter rests.

Old men say the fairies are gloomiest on November Eve (which, according to the old Gaelic reckoning, is the first night of winter). On that night they dance with ghosts and the pooka is abroad and girls set a table with food in the name of the devil, that the fetch of their future lover may come through the window. Midsummer Eve they are gayest. But on May Eve a mighty host of them gather and all night long they sweep to and fro across the length and breadth of the land.

Rarely it is they return empty handed to their raths. For the fairies, who feast well and fight better, make love best of all and are known to steal newly married brides. The technique is simple—for a fairy. He just plays the most beautiful music on his pipes and the poor girl soon gets that distant, listening look in her eyes and she pines away and dies for love of its magic. A quick substitution of bodies is then made and, "half asleep and half awake" she is led until she comes into the Land of Faery—

"Where nobody gets old and godly and grave
Where nobody gets old and bitter of tongue."

From the peasant's point of view, there is one drawback in this land of happiness. On judgment day the girl is doomed to melt like bright vapor for her soul cannot live without sorrow.

On May Eve, every seventh year, the fairies fight all round, but mostly on the "Plain-a-Bawn" (wherever that is), for the harvest, for the best ears of grain belong to them. An old man saw them once on a seventh year—saw them tear the thatch off a house in their fury. Had anyone else been near he would merely have seen a great wind whirling everything in the air.

The Irish peasant comes to terms readily with the fairies. He refuses to antagonize them as they do in Scotland. There, they discovered fairies were pagan and therefore wicked and they denounced them heartily from the pulpit. In Ireland, however, they only ill-treat each other in reason. Each admits the other side to have feelings. There are points beyond which neither will go.

They are wonderful musicians. Plenty of the old beautiful tunes of Ireland are only their music, caught up by eavesdroppers, the old people say. No wise peasant would hum "Cailin deas cruidhte na mbo" (Pretty girl milking a cow) near a faery rath, for they are jealous and do not like to hear their songs on clumsy lips. They say of Carolan, the last of the Irish bards, that he slept in the rath one night and that ever after, fairy tunes ran in his head, making him the great man that he was.

Sometimes warlike mortals of Ireland have gone amongst them and helped them in battles and they in turn have taught men great skill with herbs and permitted some few to hear the haunting magic of their tunes.

The Irish peasant usually ingratiates himself with the fairies by leaving a little milk for them overnight on the window-sill. But May Eve is an exception. The "good people" on that night take what size or shape that please them and beg for milk and fire from door to door and "woe to the house that gives for they have power upon it for a year." In some parts of Ireland they hang heavy branches of quicken wood to ward off the evil of their magic.

The only industrious person amongst them is the lepracaun—the shoemaker. He, however, is in big demand for the fairies wear out their shoes dancing. They dance, when not feasting or fighting or loving, and they never grow weary. They dance "until the reeds and white waves by Coolaney Lake have danced themselves asleep." There is a folk story of a woman who lived among them seven years. When she came home she had no toes—she had danced them all off.

Do they die? In Ireland we say they are immortal. How old are they——

"much older than the eagle cock
(That blinks and blinks on Ballygawley Hill)
And he is the oldest thing under the moon."

Books And Things

By Lewis Gannett

"This Way To The Fair"

WHATEVER ELSE world's fairs may do, they breed guidebooks. "Here Is New York" (Doubleday, $2.50) is the arrogant title Helen Worden gives her "gay Baedeker of Gotham." "A Key to New York" (Harper, $2, clothbound; Modern Age, paper-bound, 95 cents) is the soberer title which Rosalie Slocum and Ann Todd give to their soberer, and perhaps more comprehensive, book. "Portrait of New York" (Macmillan, $5) accurately describes the joint product of Felix Riesenberg's thinking and writing and Alexander Alland's photographing.

Miss Worden lives near Park avenue and Fifty-seventh street, and she thinks that the best place to dance in New York is the Iridium Room, adding as lure that "it is also about the most expensive," which perhaps keys her point of view. Miss Slocum and Miss Todd give no key to their residence, or to their personalities, in their workmanlike book; but they know what factories in the city welcome visitors; they understand the city's architectural history; the museums excite them more than the night clubs, and tell where all the playgrounds are, and the branch libraries and swimming pools. I don't know where Mr. Riesenberg lives, but the subway haunts his picture of the city.

Rush hour underground looks [illegible] Riesenberg "like ramming [illegible]p powder bags into the breech of the tremendous cannon." He hates its "repellent intimacy." "We have had our subways for 34 suffocating, psychopathic years," he complains, but adds, with a touch of strange forgiveness, that "the subway is not only a way of suffering, a means of transport; it is a refuge to the lonesome and the cold, especially on its late night and early morning runs. The homeless citizen can board a train anywhere without question, or the formality of registering."

So Mr. Riesenberg sagely mixes hates with his loves of New York, and pauses to philosophize. He wonders what effect the fluctuating air pressures in elevators which rush up and down 20 miles an hour may have upon the minds of elevator operators and whether the high carbon monoxide content of our street air may not be antiseptic after all. He calls Broadway the nation's "sap trap," and insists that Park avenue is really a gin, not a champagne, street; he recalls that on most days 400,000 men are tramping this replendent city's streets looking for work; he enterains his reader with the glittering story of Miss Myrtle Kipper, of the New York office of National Bon Ton Specialties, and Mr. Moosepuss, a buyer in town from Williamsport, Pa. Unlike Miss Worden, who sees Coney Island as run down, he holds that nothing can compare with Coney, which has the sea and the people as well as the streets, and watching its tawdry splendor, he sees not merely a rabble but "our brothers seeking the ideal. An O. Henry mood.

"HERE IS NEW YORK" is advertised as "the only book of its kind authorized by the World's Fair." It is the work of an expert reporter who has spent years hunting out the picturesque and glamorous in the big city. She knows the restaurants of cafe society; the reader may have to hunt to find his favorite holes-in-a-corner, but they, too, are likely to be mentioned in her book. She knows main streets and by streets—wherever there is color. For the visitor with money to spend, hers is the book.

What surprised me most in her book was her report that a gentleman whom she describes as "New York's greatest judge of beauty," John Powers, who has appraised a million faces and figures for his model agency, says that "Everybody wants a natural-looking girl now. Her hair mustn't be too curly. Mascara's taboo and lipstick is out." I don't study the fashion pages, but that was news to me. Maybe that's why the girls wear those hats—to make 'em look "natural."

For visitors who want to see New York on little money, "A Key to New York" is the obvious recommendation. It would be particularly useful to visiting high school classes.

One thing these guide books do is to fill a New York reader with an impossible desire to take a vacation in his own home town. I've lived here for almost a quarter century; I've never taken the boat trip around Manhattan or been to the Statue of Liberty or to Ellis Island; I've never been inside the Dyckman House or the Jumel Mansion, the Heye Indian Museum or the Museum of the New York Historical Society; I've never seen the gardens of the world atop the Rockefeller Center or been to Randall's Island stadium on a summer's night, and I've never seen the Seabury Tredwell House at 29 East Fourth street, though for more than two years I've kept on my desk Will Irwin's "Highlights of Manhattan," which first told me of what must be seen of the loveliest houses in the city, a scant three-quarters of a mile from my own apartment. "A frozen bit of a past era, like a mastodon in a glacier of the Arctic," Will Irwin calls it.

The Yugoslav Dilemma

By S. Miles Bouton

THE YUGOSLAV foreign minister, Alexander Cinca-Markovitch, has been visiting Berlin—"for information, not treaties," as he declared. He is reported also to have said that his government will make no new commitments to Germany. All Yugoslavia wants is "clarification of certain questions raised in conversation with Foreign Minister Ciano of Italy," and to remain neutral between Europe's two rival camps. "Political circles said they believed Yugoslavia had avoided definite commitments to Italy and Germany thus far, despite an official communique issued after the talks with Ciano, which promised 'faithful collaboration' with the axis."

Writing for the North American can Newspaper Alliance, Sir Arthur Willert says:

"Yugoslavia is under tremendous pressure from Berlin to join the dictatorial combination. She is being told that her choice lies between compliance and obliteration."

Sir Arthur's reference to obliteration lends interest to a report which has just reached me, dated April 8. It says:

"At 11 o'clock Thursday evening, April 6, Rome informed the Wilhelmsstrasse (German Foreign Office) that Mussolini had accepted Hitler's plan for the partition of Yugoslavia. The two axis states have agreed that the formerly Austrian parts of Yugoslavia shall be handed over to Germany, and that Mussolini shall have a free hand as to the rest, including the eventual establishing of a protectorate."

THE REPORT that the Croat problem appears to have been settled following conversations between Premier Cvetkovitch and Dr. Vladimir Matchek, leader of the Croats, at Zagreb, seems to indicate that while Belgrade may not know definitely the eventual fate proposed for Yugoslavia, it realizes that the situation is menacing. When the Kingdom of the Serbs, Croats and Slovenes was erected—on paper—on the Island of Corfu in 1917, it was contemplated as a union of three autonomous states or provinces, joined, much as the United States, under the central government in Belgrade. But in all the twenty years since that kingdom was actually created, the rights of the Croats and Slovenes have been violated by the Serbs. It is a reasonable conjecture that they would not now be granted unless danger threatened from without.

The German-Italian plans for eventual partition of the tripartite kingdom are, of course, what the Germans would call "Zukunftsmusik" (music of the future.) What heavy pressure has meanwhile been exercised upon Yugoslavia by the axis appears from a report that all restrictions upon the propaganda, meetings and other activities of the Schwaebisch-Deutscher Kulturbund (Suevian-German Cultural League) in Slovenia have been removed by the Belgrade government. This league is one of the branches of the League for Germans Abroad, of which Gauleiter (District Leader) Bohle is head, as he also heads all similar organizations in South America. It had hitherto been completely prohibited in Slovenia and subjected to many restrictions in the rest of Yugoslavia.

HITLER has believed—perhaps still believes—that he can get what he wants without war, but for some time his advisers have not shared his optimism. A purge is now going on of high army officers who exhibited "a dangerous pessimism" preceding the Munich Conference of last September. The decision to dismiss them was reached at a meeting of the Supreme Leadership Council of the National Socialist Party on October 16 last year. Hitler declared then that every officer who so much as "batted an eye" (mit der Wimper zuckte) during a crisis must go.

The list of offenders is reported to number 31 officers, and "certain limitations on personal freedom" are allegedly planned for some of them. Two of the first to go are Gen. von Stuelpnagel, commander of the aviation school, and Lieut. Gen. Quade, also of the air force. Both were dismissed on April 1. Stuelpnagel was one of the September "pessimists." He also offended by sharply opposing the theory that war can be decided by the air arm and by expressing low estimates of the Italian army. Quade, also September pessimist, aggravated his offending by declaring that the democracies could well risk a battle in the air if they would remain on the defensive until they received further material from America and trained further pilots. This, he believed, could be done within three months.

Gen. Volkmann succeeds Stuelpnagel and Maj. Gen. Bieneck succeeds Quade. Volkmann is an intimate friend of Hermann Goering's and an advocate of the theory of massed airplane attacks on a single goal. He was secretly a member of the National Socialist Party as long ago as 1929, when such membership was prohibited to all members of the then Reichswehr.

THE GESTAPO (Political Police) estimate the situation so gravely that orders have been given to double the capacity of the existing concentration camps and to build six further ones for "work prisoners," that is, former members of republican parties whose names are on the "mobilization arrest list" because they are regarded as "undependable." These camps will be built near the cities of Hanover, Stettin, Stassfurt, Dortmund and Stendal, and at the Leuna Works in Thuringia.

There is also to be built a "preventive camp" in the Luneburg Heath for roundly 25,000 prisoners. This will be for the clergy of all faiths, members of the professions, small industrialists and others who, it is feared, would infect the morale of the people if there should be defeats at the front.

In a consultation in the ministry of the interior, attended by many officers of the great general staff, it was reported that many additional arrests must be made in case of war. The estimates given were roundly 175,000 in the old Reich, about 100,000 in Austria and about 60,000 in Bohemia and Moravia. Plans include further the compulsory massing of some 300,000 laborers from the old Reich, 150,000 from Austria and 120,000 from Bohemia and Moravia in work projects "under mild discipline," that is, without actual confinement and with permission to be accompanied by wives and children where possible.

THAT 100,000 Austrian arrests are contemplated against only 150,000 in the old Reich, whose population is about twelve times greater than Austria's, adds significance to a doleful report made in the first week of March to Berlin by Governor Seiss-Inquart of Austria, dealing with the dissatisfaction in the annexed land. It begins with a reference to "the growing uneasy concern," especially in the rural districts, due to the rigorous enforcement of military service, to the sending of Austrian recruits and reservists to garrisons in northern and Eastern Germany, and to the rapid manner in which industrialization of the country for war is reaching deeply into the people's lives and the existing industrial structure of the province.

In addition to this, reports Governor (Statthalter Seiss-Inquart, further unrest is caused by the "often exaggerated and unnecessarily rapid co-ordinating of the public administration," and the "reshaping and co-ordinating of the economic life and trade" begun last November. The Austrian industrialists and merchants had felt that they had done all that was required for retaining their posts when they had complied with the requirement to produce evidence of their Aryan blood and had shown themselves willing to work loyally with the Reich government. But now more and more of them were complaining that they were being more and more eliminated by a slow but effective "semiofficial and official pressure," and were being replaced under all kinds of pretexts by germans from the old Reich, "especially from northeastern Germany" (Prussians).

They complain further, reports the Statthalter, that these successors talk contemptuously about "undependability," and also talk in disturbing manner of "mobilization and war." Especially the campaign for security against air attacks causes widespread anxiety and heightens the fear of war.

Renewed Courage

By Ernest K. Lindley

Reaction to Hitler

FIRST EFFECT on Congress of Hitler's speech was to renew the courage of those who are opposed to our meddling in the affairs of the European continent.

Why this should have been so is not altogether clear. Perhaps it was because Hitler was adroit in his argument and moderate in tone. Perhaps it was because he told some truths about the injustices inflicted on Germany 20 years ago and about the skeletons in the closets of the democratic nations, including the United States. The moral preachments to which we are addicted in the conduct of our foreign affairs may represent noble aspirations, but when placed against the records of history, including our own, they seem somewhat hypocritical.

If the Roosevelt-Hitler exchange is regarded as a debate, Mr. Roosevelt came off second best—just as he did six years ago in a similar exchange. In May, 1933, when the breakdown of the disarmament conference impended and Hitler rattled his saber, Mr. Roosevelt dispatched a message to the heads of all the nations of the world, proposing a general non-aggression pact by which all nations would agree, subject to treaty right, to send no armed force of any kind beyond their own frontiers. This, in essence, is what Mr. Roosevelt proposed again two weeks ago, except that this time he addressed only Hitler and Mussolini.

German Case Stronger in 1933

THE COROLLARY to Mr. Roosevelt's proposal of May, 1933, was unfolded a few days later at Geneva by Norman H. Davis, our chief representative at the disarmament conference. Mr. Davis said that if the Roosevelt non-aggression pact were adopted and that if it were accompanied by a substantial degree of disarmament, the United States would become a passive, if not an active, partner in the restraint of an aggressor. That is, if a state were found to be responsible for a breach of the peace, and we agreed that it was responsible, we would refrain from any action tending to defeat a collective effort "to restore peace."

Hitler used Mr. Roosevelt's proposal of May, 1933, as the springboard for an extremely effective presentation, before the Reichstag, of the German case. The German case was far stronger then than it is now. Most of the injustices of Versailles had not been rectified, and Hitler had had no chance to demonstrate that his objectives went beyond their rectification.

Roosevelt 'Routed' In Former Excursion

THE MAY, 1933, excursion of Mr. Roosevelt ended in his complete rout and the quickening of "hands off Europe" sentiment in the United States.

The first reaction in Congress to Hitler's speech of Friday morning was similar to the reaction to his Reichstag address of six years ago, but it was less pronounced and, I think, will be less enduring. He skillfully emphasized his claims concerning Danzig and the Polish Corridor—claims which, as he outlined them, seemed reasonable enough. "Why should we be interested in what happens to Danzig, an overwhelmingly German city, or in whether the Germans get rights-of-way between west and east Prussia?" is a question which must have come to the minds of many American citizens.

Hitler's speech may have been mildly soothing to certain sections of American opinion. But who can say whether it offset within Germany the effect of Mr. Roosevelt's message? Or how much effect it had on Hitler's near neighbors?

Closed No Doors To Peace Or War

WHO CAN SAY whether Mr. Roosevelt helped to postpone a general war or whether he hastened the explosion of Europe with one great bang?

The test is in what happens. As to his future course Hitler gave no clues—or, rather, he spread so many clues that nobody can be sure which are genuine and which are false. He closed no doors—either to peace or war—and, in fact, he opened two more doors by denouncing his non-aggression pact with Poland and his naval agreement with Great Britain. It can be assumed that he would rather dispose of his enemies one by one than fight an alliance, but, if convinced that sooner or later he must fight an alliance, perhaps he would rather take the risk now.

Counting the Russians, about 12,000,000 men are under arms in Europe and the four biggest navies of Europe are concentrated in or near the Mediterranean. No such mobilization has ever occurred before without leading directly to war. When, and if, the demobilization gets under way, it will be time to breathe a sigh of relief—but not too great a sigh, because there may be another mobilization within a few months, after the harvest season.

On The Record

By Dorothy Thompson

Hitler's Speech

Hitler's speech was designed for propaganda purposes inside and outside Germany. It is from that viewpoint—from an analysis of its purpose—that it should be considered.

Hitler does not give away his plans in speeches. He conceals them.

All his speeches follow the same pattern, and why should they not? That pattern has so far succeeded remarkably. By it he came to power in Germany; by it he has won his victories so far; not by war, but by propaganda.

He is not, so far, a war-maker. He is, however, the most masterly living revolutionist.

The speech was designed to defend himself at home and to divide the democracies, internally, abroad.

As far as this second aim is concerned, it was masterly. The part of the speech devoted to answering the President of the United States was prepared by the German Embassy in Washington. That may be one reason why he waited 13 days for his answer.

THE ARGUMENTS which he marshaled were carefully aimed at the anti-Roosevelt forces in this country and were designed to play upon the isolationist sentiment.

The disillusion of all Americans with the result of the last war is known. The Treaty of Versailles has been a red flag to almost as many Americans as it has been to Germans; the feeling of betrayal is strong in America as it was in Germany.

The holding up to laughing scorn of any designs on the Americans followed the pattern of that school of American thought which still believes that the two oceans are eternal protection, under all possible circumstances, for this hemisphere.

The rebuke to American interference in European affairs, while it distorted the President's message, which specifically exempted the United States from any political interests in Europe and offered the services of the President merely as a neutral intermediary, was couched in almost the language used by many of our own critics of the State Department's foreign policy.

The reference to the repeated failures of disarmament conferences took advantage of American defeatism with regard to any attempts to restore a working modus vivendi among nations on the basis of peace.

The caustic remarks about the past brutalities of Great Britain followed an energetic propaganda which has been made in this country for months.

TO DIVERT ATTENTION from the crimes and realities of the present to the crimes and betrayals of the past has always been an effective Hitlerian tactic.

Inside Germany he persuaded the German people to relinquish every vestige of personal liberty and to lend their support to the most appalling brutalities in order to extinguish past injustices to the German nation.

He has always played upon the instinct for justice as well as upon the instinct for revenge; truth as well as falsehood; love as well as hate.

Always and on all occasions he has not hesitated to exploit the liberal sympathy for the German cause to offset the liberal revulsion against Nazi methods.

But in no public address has he ever done this more cleverly.

His object being to keep the world in a state of jitters and the democracies played off internally, against one another, through party differences, he made a very long speech, the net effect of which would be to baffle and confuse.

FOR YEARS HE SUCCEEDED by this tactic in dividing public opinion in Great Britain. Mr. Chamberlain, Lord and Lady Astor, such Liberals as Sir Herbert Samuel and Lord Lothian, such honest pacifists as Mr. Lansbury, and genuine pro-Fascist elements, played his game for him far more effectively than he could play it himself. He knows that there is a great time lag in the United States.

He also knows how enormously effective is the appeal to social unrest, to the unquestionable failure of the democracies adequately to deal with their most pressing problems, such as unemployment, and he was informed of the strong opinion in this country that Roosevelt is exploiting the international situation to cover the failure of the New Deal.

He made the most of this. The German Embassy in Washington did a good job and so did he.

Nevertheless, American opinion will not, when it has had time to analyze the speech quietly, miss the fact that he avoided entirely the fundamental issue raised by the President.

HE ANSWERED THE PRESIDENT point by point because by this method he could avoid dealing with the message as a whole.

But it is the message as a whole which makes the issue clear. That issue was, and remains, the only real issue in the world and it can be simply stated. It was whether the world is to attempt to right injustices, whether political or economic, by negotiation, in an atmosphere predicated upon trust and upon the possibility of collaboration or whether action is to be taken unilaterally by the test of naked force.

If it is to be the latter, then there will be war. The President's appeal was an appeal for general arbitration. And this appeal was not quite, not clearly nor altogether repudiated though it was certainly not accepted.

That is probably what the President meant by his remark, "The door is open about an inch."

It is extremely significant that—and I think for home consumption—Hitler devoted almost a third of his speech to a defense of his conquest of Czecho-Slovakia.

AND THIS PART of the speech was a miserable fiasco and nullified most of the rest of his defense. For Hitler has consistently appealed to the Wilsonian principle of self-determination for nations, and this principle has made up his strongest case.

Germany, as a nation, and not as a Nazi regime, had a case in Austria. Germany had a case in the Sudetenland. Germany has a case in Danzig. That case in each respect has been gravely injured by the method of Hitler's victories.

There is no case for treating Chancellor Schuschnigg as a traitor; no case for the Austrian concentration camps; no case for the cynical confiscation of private properties without any attempt at compensation; no case for the brutal persecution of political and racial minorities.

And Hitler, on the grounds of national self-determination, has not a shred of a case in Bohemia and Moravia, and the German people know it. For the 7,000,000 Czechs that he forcibly gathered into the Reich, Adolf Hitler broke more than 7,000,000 German hearts.

The very thesis of the "Volksstaat," of the ethnical and national entity on the basis of which Hitler coined his most attractive phrase, "The Union of All Germans," has been violated utterly by the conquest of Czechia, and the German people know it. This is the greatest of Hitler's betrayals—his betrayal of his own people.

THE SUBSTANCE OF EUROPE has been the nations of Europe—not the states. Woodrow Wilson knew this, and his failure to stand for it foursquare, to insist upon it, to leave Paris if it were violated, together with the collapse of his support at home was the tragedy of 1919.

The Wilsonian philosophy will triumph yet, years after he is disillusioned dust, if Europe is to have stable peace. It will have to be revived and implemented by economic collaboration. Justice, according to Wilson, and according to the lipservice of Adolf Hitler, has meant the right of nations to self-determination. Nations will live. They will fight for national liberty and be perennial centers of insecurity and revolution until they are satisfied.

Hitler himself is proof of this. If one nation is subject to another—that is injustice. Hitler himself has testified to this.

But in Czecho-Slovakia he has violated this principle. And in defending the violation, he revives the concept of the hegemony of one nation over half of Europe, and eventually, therefore, over all.

This concept was the cause of the last war; it was the cause of the revolt of Germany under Hitler; it will be the cause of the next war, if the next war comes.

In taking Czecho-Slovakia the Nazi government propelled Europe toward an abyss.

IT IS NO ARGUMENT for Hitler to say that Masaryk made the same mistake. It is no argument to appeal against the Treaty of Versailles. What Hitler did in Czecho-Slovakia was Versaillism on a more brutal and prodigious scale without even those considerations of justice, those provisions for minority and property rights, which Versailles, at least, did incorporate.

The President's appeal was a cry not to do this all over again; not, all over again, to sow the dragon's teeth for another titanic struggle; not to act as though human beings were the creatures of blind fate, but to admit that they have a will and that mankind has a common destiny.

The hope to avert war, the hope that we shall begin, at long last, to make peace lies in Germany.

It is a great people, the German people. It is a people with an enormous capacity for righteousness. The righteous wrath of the Germans has been on Hitler's side in so far as his aims—whatever his method—were in conformity with the German sense of justice. This column believes that from the beginning they were deceived. This column has believed, from the beginning, that what has happened would happen. Now the German people, too, are beginning to see. They will forgive blindness; they have themselves been blinded. But they will not, in the long run, forgive baseness.

The answer to Hitler's speech is not confusion and division; it is not to fall into a carefully prepared trap baited with our own debate. The answer must be calmness, confidence, and a clearer vision of the future that must come, if the world is again to be serene.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

Action Pictures Come Back

Hollywood producers have got around to concluding that a talking picture need not necessarily be an interlude of inaction. They may still be puzzled over how to hold their audience, but have discovered the secret of not putting them to sleep.

The secret is action, and they are restoring it by taking the old-time Westerns out of camphor, streamlining 'em and adding color and a little more implausibility than ever. The modern Hollywood idea of a frontier sheriff is a glamour boy with a Stetson and a gun, but as long as they are getting plenty of zip and gusto for a change the customers don't care.

When the talkies came in eight or ten years ago action went out the window. Most pictures became studies in conversation and other noises. The trouble with the movies was that they stopped moving.

You could go to picture theaters for weeks at a time and not see anybody get out of his chair except to mix a drink, answer the telephone or start a line of smart talk with a new arrival.

Then some producer came out with a cowboy picture in technicolor, and the public response was so hearty that once again it is possible to star a horse, a locomotive or a faro game.

Those Hollywood actors and actresses are all learning to ride again. No screen queen is tops today unless she photographs well against a buffalo herd.

Last year's drawing room darling is this season's covered-wagon Nell, and the lad who seemed most convincing when chattering away on a flowered terrace now has to be tops at hopping from a moving baggage car onto the back of a galloping horse.

If the trend keeps on they will be sticking a rodeo in "Gone With the Wind" and require that Clark Gable have at least three scenes in which he shoots up a cow-town saloon, stops a hanging just outside of Boot Hill or sticks up the Deadwood coach.

"Wuthering Heights" would have been a smash, they are saying, if the authors had thought to put in a wagon train and let the whole thing end with an Indian massacre.

All of which is O. K. with this department. Technicolor has certainly given a new glamor to the Westerns. It's like getting back those old boyhood dime novels off modern color presses.

Every border sheriff and most of the bad men of the plains would turn over in their graves if they could get a peek at the hair-conditioned boys who are impersonating them in pictures. But what of it? We can't have everything.

On to the World's Fair! And if you have any trouble getting directions, ask any visitor, but don't try getting a native New Yorker to tell you how to get there.

'Round and 'Round and 'Round

What we, as an old picture fan, can't make out after watching all those movies of horse-race stories, is how many times a director thinks the horses circle a mile-and-a-half track in a 6-furlong race.

The Illinois Legislature has before it a bill to prohibit double features in the picture houses. Now if some State will only do something about those flashes of next week's attractions . . .

Justice Philip J. McCook, of New York, has ruled against an order issued by the police department banning sandwich men from city streets, and this department is with him. The sandwich man may need a shave, a haircut, a suit of clothes and a square meal, but he is just about the last survivor of a once conspicuous type of American, the fellow who was determined to do anything to make a living on his own.

They discovered that hot dogs of tomorrow are identical with those in the omniscient present, that the plumbing facilities are many, excellent and free; that there are lots of park benches, but not quite enough; that come hell, high-water or Hitler, both Albania and Czecho-Slovakia, among the 60 foreign exhibitors, cling stubbornly to their buildings; that the building of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics is so overpoweringly magnificent it brooks no comparison; that the trylon and perisphere, in person, look impressive instead of silly, as they do in pictures; that in the World of Tomorrow a building has pictures painted on the outside (murals) instead of in; and that Broadway must have been combed for all its pretty girls to work in the fair concessions.

In creating the World of Tomorrow, Mr. Whalen, its presiding genius, overlooked but one vital item; Feet of the future, preferably of cast iron, to carry the customers through the miles of educational, inspirational, goofy, exciting and prophetic exhibits that constitute the biggest world's fair ever assembled.

By mid-afternoon, patrons were limping about a fair whose wonders are so many and so gargantuan as to bring the sturdiest system dry of superlatives within 30 minutes.

Color Everywhere

Towers of glass, spiral columns of captive light, acres of rounded walls, soaring geometric planes, dizzy angular surfaces, lightning chained in stainless steel, some of the doggonedest statuary you have ever seen; curving roofs, miles of circular ramps and exciting color, color, color everywhere in this world's fair design for living in the future.

But if the majority of the architecture bears the future brand called "functional," such as the magnificent Chrysler, Ford and General Motors buildings, there is also architecture on which the classicist can rest his peepers.

Time marches and counter marches and telescopes in the world of tomorrow. It marches backward in the New England exhibit, where the New England States have reproduced a typical wharf, with a Yankee Clipper at anchor, a New England market and typical red brick buildings.

States Have Exhibits

It marches even farther back in the handsome New Jersey State building, a field stone reproduction of the Revolutionary barracks at Trenton. Pennsylvania has reproduced in part Independence Hall in Philadelphia. And Texas has her Alamo.

Not here—in the Court of States—where the Father of his Country might recognize his handiwork, but in the midst of functional world-of-tomorrow architecture, facing the perisphere and trylon, stands the 65-foot statue of George Washington, whose inauguration as President of the United Sates this fair honors.

Here the First President faces the 700-foot bat that is the trylon and the tremendous ball that is the perisphere, which rises above a huge, shallow reflecting pool. This pool is bound to be so tempting to young visitors during the dog days that fair authorities might as well make up their minds to substitute life guards for cops during July and August.

Between the trylon and perisphere on the south and the Federal Building on the north runs broad Constitution Mall.

Midway in the Mall is the fair's graceful bow to the eternal world of fairyland—Fountain Lake—from which endless plumelike jets of water rise into the air until the whole lake seems an enchanting thing of light and spray.

Text of President's Address Opening N. Y. World's Fair

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 30.—Following is the text of President Roosevelt's speech opening the New York World's Fair:

From henceforth the 30th day of April will have a dual significance—the inauguration of the first President of the United States, thus beginning the executive branch of the Federal Government, and the opening of the New York World's Fair fo 1939.

Today the cycle of sesquicentennial commemorations is complete. Two years ago, in Philadelphia and in other communities, was celebrated the constitutional convention of 1787 which gave to us the form of government under which we have lived ever since. Last year was celebrated in many States the ratification of the Constitution by the original States. On March 4 of this year the first meeting of the first Congress was commemorated at a distinguished gathering in the House of Representatives in the National Capitol. On April 14, I went to Mount Vernon with the Cabinet in memory of that day, exactly 150 years before, when Gen. Washington was formally notified of his election as first President.

Two days later he left the home he loved so well and proceeded by easy stages to New York, greeted with triumphal arches and flower-strewn streets in the large communities through which he passed on his way to New York City. Fortunately, there have been preserved for us many accounts of his taking of the oath of office on April 30 on the balcony of the old Federal Hall. In a sense of republican simplicity and surrounded by the great men of the time, most of whom had served with him in the cause of independence throughout the Revolution, the oath was administered by the chancellor of the State of New York, Robert R. Livingston.

Critical Days Were Over

The permanent Government of the United States had become a fact. The period of revolution and the critical days that followed were over. The long future lay ahead.

In the framework of government which had been devised, and in the early years of its administration, it is of enormous significance to us today that those early leaders successfully planned for such use of the Constitution as would fit it to a constantly expanding Nation. That the original framework was capable of expansion from its application to 13 States with less than 4,000,000 people, to 48 States with more than 130,000,000 people is the best tribute to the vision of the framers. In this it stands unique in the whole history of the world, for no other form of government has remained unchanged so long and seen, at the same time, any comparable expansion of population or of area.

It is significant that the astounding changes and advances in almost every phase of human life have made necessary so relatively few changes in the Constitution. All of the earlier amendments may be accepted as part of the original Constitution because the Bill of Rights, which guaranteed and has maintained personal liberty through freedom of speech, freedom of the press, freedom of religion and similar essentials of democracy, was already popularly accepted while the Constitution itself was in the process of ratification.

There followed the amendments which put an end to the practice of human slavery and a number of later amendments which made our practice of government more direct, including the extension of the franchise to the women of the Nation. It is well to note also that the only restrictive personal liberty was, after a trial of a few years, overwhelmingly repealed.

Union Stronger Today

Only once has permanence of the Constitution been threatened—it was threatened by an internal war brought about principally by the very fact of the expansion of American civilization across the continent—a threat which resulted eventually and happily in a closer union than ever before.

And of these later years—these very recent years, indeed—the history books of the next generation will set it forth that sectionalism and regional jealousies diminished and that the people of every part of our land acquired a national solidarity of economic and social thought such as had never been seen before.

That this has been accomplished has been due first to our form of government itself and, secondly, to a spirit of wise tolerance which, with few exceptions, has been the rule. We in the United States, and, indeed, in all the Americas, remember that our population stems from many races and kindreds and tongues. Often, I think, we Americans offer up the silent prayer that on the Continent of Europe, from which the American Hemisphere was principally colonized, the years to come will break down many barriers of intercourse between nations—barriers which may be historic, but which so greatly, through the centuries, have led to strife and hindered friendship and normal intercourse.

The United States stands today as a completely homogeneous Nation, similar in its civilization from coast to coast and from north to south, united in a common purpose to work for the greatest good of the greatest number, united in the desire to move forward to better things in the use of its great resources of nature and its even greater resources of intelligent, educated manhood and womanhood—and united in its desire to encourage peace and goodwill among all the nations of the world.

"Two Great Expositions"

Born of that unity of purpose, that knowledge of strength, that singleness of ideal, two great expositions, one at each end of the continent, mark this year in which we live. And it is fitting that they commemorate the 150th anniversary of the birth of our permanent Government.

Opened two months ago, the exposition on the magic island in San Francisco Bay presents to visitors from all the world a view of the amazing development of our Far West and of the neighbors of the American continent and the nations of the isles of the Pacific.

Here at the New York World's Fair many nations are also represented—most of the nations of the world—and the theme is "The World of Tomorrow."

This general, and I might almost say spontaneous, participation by other countries, is a gesture of friendship and good-will toward the United States for which I render grateful thanks. It is not through the physical exhibits alone that this gesture has manifested itself. The magic of modern communications makes possible a continuing participation by word of mouth itself.

Already on Sunday afternoon radio programs, no fewer than 17 foreign nations have shown their good-will to this country since the first of January.

In many instances the chiefs of state in the countries taking part in the programs have spoken and in every case the principal speaker has extended greetings to the President of the United States. In this place and at this time, as we open this New York World's Fair, I desire to thank all of them and to assure them that we, as a Nation, heartily reciprocate all of their cordial sentiments.

All who come to this World's Fair in New York and to the Exposition in San Francisco will receive the heartiest of welcomes. They will find that the eyes of the United States are fixed on the future. Our wagon is hitched to a star.

But it is a star of good-will, a star of progress for mankind, a star of greater happiness and less hardship, a star of international good-will, and, above all, a star of peace.

May the months to come carry us forward in the rays of that hope.

I hereby dedicate the New York World's Fair of 1939 and declare it open to all mankind.

Roosevelts Entertain Second Royal Couple; Danish Crown Prince, Princess to Visit Fair

By International News Service.

Hyde Park, N. Y., April 30.—The second royal couple within 12 hours—Crown Prince Frederik and Crown Princess Ingrid of Denmark and Iceland—were entertained tonight by President and Mrs. Roosevelt.

The Chief Executive rushed back from the New York World's Fair to greet the Danes, who had come up the Hudson aboard the White House yacht Potomac. Crown Prince Olaf and Crown Princess Martha of Norway departed early this morning for West Point and the World's Fair after a 48-hour visit with the Roosevelts.

Frederik and Ingrid, who began their tour of the United States at the San Francisco Exposition, will remain at Hyde Park until late tomorrow night, then leave for New York to open the Danish exhibit on Tuesday.

Mr. Roosevelt's train was slightly late in returning from the fair opening. He and Mrs. Roosevelt motored immediately to a lumber yard dock in Poughkeepsie to find the Potomac already tied up.

The Danish crown prince and his princess stepped down the gangplank preceded by their chamberlain, Capt. Commander Vest, and followed by Countess Reventlow, lady in waiting.

President and Mrs. Roosevelt greeted them cordially and conversed animatedly while photographers recorded the scene. The President and the Prince then entered one car, followed by Mrs. Roosevelt and the Princess in a second, and whisked up the Albany post road to Hyde Park.

Tonight, Frederik and Ingrid were entertained at an informal family dinner. Lotta Kraus, an Austrian refugee soprano, sang.

Accompanying the Danish couple were Danish Minister and Mme. Wadsted, Capt. Lieut. Weilbach, aide; Karl Eskelund, press officer; Lieut. Col. Crane, American military aide, and Commander Wiltse, American naval aide.

Mrs. Astor's Tea Is Social Climax Of Congressional Trip to N. Y. Fair

700 Senators, Representatives and Families, With Diplomats of 60 Nations Solemn at Opening Rites, Quite Shop-Talkative on Train

By Hope Ridings Miller,
The Post Society Editor.

World's Fair, New York, April 30.—Any time after 7 o'clock this morning Speaker Bankhead could have called a special session of the House of Representatives. The 10-car, high-speed train pulling out of Union Station at that hour carried the largest Congressional delegation ever to leave the Capital.

Wearing white ribbon badges bearing Washington's portrait, 700 Senators, Representatives and members of their families were "off to the Fair" in a big way, with a maximum of fanfare and a minimum of effort, all guests of Grover Whalen and the board of directors of "The World of Tomorrow built with the tools of today."

Luncheon at the Federal Building, where a flock of diplomats also were entertained, choice seats on the platform that faced the mammoth crowd, attendance at the re-enactment of George Washington's inauguration ("This is why Sol Bloom got us here," said one Senator), and a quick turn around the grounds were other items on a calendar that officially drew to a close when the return train skimmed out of the World's Fair Station headed for the Capital at 8:30 p. m.

"Mrs. Astor's Tea" also was on the program for a few of the more fortunate Congressional wives. Mrs. Courtlandt D. Barnes, chairman of the State Women's Committee, was hostess at the party, given in honor of Mrs. Vincent Astor, chairman of the National Advisory Committee on women's participation in the New York World's Fair. The glassed-in rotunda of the advisory committee's swanky headquarters was the scene of the tea, which drew several hundred women and a scattering of men, all invited guests.

Mrs. Glover Welcomes Committee

Mrs. Charles Carroll Glover, chairman of the D. C. Committee, was there, welcoming other committee members from Washington. Senator and Mrs. Claude Pepper were on hand with a delegation from Florida and Mrs. Ellen S. Woodward was flanked by a group from Mississippi. Mrs. Robert Low Bacon, Mrs. Bowler Hull and Mrs. Izetta Jewel Miller were other local notables seen in the throng. Also there was the former Mrs. Isabella Greenway, one-time member of Congress, who arrived with her husband, Harry King.

Socially speaking, although nobody seemed to be doing that today, the tea was a high point on the day's program. Less colorful, certainly smaller than any of the other get-togethers on the calendar, it was a brilliant get-together, heavily studded with social notables from New York, Washington, Philadelphia and points in all other directions. Looking very grand was Mrs. Astor, who wore a smart frock of black sheer wool with a corsage of crimson carnations and a tiny pastel petal turban set off with a wispy veil.

"But where was Mrs. Roosevelt," asked a woman with a Middle-Western accent. "If she had been there, the party would have been perfect."

Truth is, howver, Mrs. Roosevelt was not expected. Her part on the opening day's program had been completed several hours before, and by tea time she and the President were on their way back to Hyde Park, where they will have as their guests tonight and tomorrow Denmark's Crown Prince and Crown Princess.

High point of today's schedule so far as Washington notables, or anybody else was concerned was the opening ceremony, in the Court of Peace, attended by representatives of sixty countries. Seated in solemn grandeur in choice sections on the platform, they heard the string of speeches and contributed slightly to applause that could have been more enthusiastic. Tophats, cutaways and striped trousers was the favored masculine attire, while women were displaying their flossiest finery.

That trylon and perisphere you've been hearing about were in full view of the platform assemble, but those seated nearest the President's box had a closer view of hundreds of copies of the Fair's theme motif, all a part of the white print figures on Mrs. Roosevelt's japonica silk frock. A toast straw hat, trimmed with a band to match the dress, a purse made of similar material and white gloves set off her ensemble. Mrs. Grover Whalen, who was among the first to arrive in the center box, was sitting there when her husband, Mayor LaGuardia and Gov. Lehmann swung down the Avenue of Peace, followed by the board of directors of the Fair. Mrs. Whalen wore a brown frock and sable neckpiece with a small pink feather turban. Mrs. Lehmann, Mrs. James Roosevelt, jr., and Miss Marguerite Lehand were others in the box reserved for the President and his party.

Mrs. Roosevelt arrived with Postmaster General Farley and was in her chair when the President's car pulled up. Accompanying the Chief Executive were his mother, Mrs. Sara Delano Roosevelt and his son, John Roosevelt.

Sidelights:

Grover Whalen's famous smile, never broader than it was during most of the opening ceremony, faded during the President's speech when the latter mentioned and dwelt on the wonders of the San Francisco World's Fair. Secretary of War and Mrs. Harry H. Woodring, among the first to arrive in the special section on the platform, were seated in the front row. Later, they were joined by Speaker and Mrs. Bankhead, Secretary of Labor Perkins, who for once appeared without her famous tricorne and wore instead a handsome, wide-brimmed straw bonnet. Secretary of Agriculture Wallace arrived shortly before the President's party and took his seat with other members of the Cabinet. Also in a front row seat, across the aisle from the Cabinet was Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, in a smart violet ensemble.

Tallulah Bankhead, Lily Pons in Crowd

The Attorney General, wreathed in smiles, came in with Mr. and Mrs. D. F. Foy and their two children, Joan and Cynthia, the former of whom is the A. G.'s godchild.

Even bets were being offered all around that Speaker Bankhead heard very little of Grover Whalen's speech. When the latter was hardly started, Miss Tallulah Bankhead, actress-daughter of the Speaker, threaded her way through the crowd and took a seat beside her father.

A few minutes later, John Emery, husband of Miss Bankhead, arrived and took his seat behind the Speaker. William Rhinelander Stewart, New York's "Beau Brummel," was also seen in the crowd—dressed in a blue suit.

Lily Pons, swathed in a cloud of blue veiling that fell from a blue hat, wound round her neck and hung almost to the hem of her skirt, was also a center of attention. She, Miss Bankhead and Fannie Hurst, the writer, were surrounded by autograph hounds from the minute the crowd broke up.

The section reserved for diplomats was filled to the last seat. Towering Sir Ronald Lindsay, the British Ambassador, listened with special attention as Sir Louis Beale, Commissioner General for His Majesty's government, delivered his address. The Argentine Ambassador was there with Senora de Espil, whose pink and fuschia plume hat was a gay splash of color in the crowd. The French Ambassador, Count Rene de Saint Quentin, had in tow a delegation of commissioners from his country and the Portugese Minister, who was accompanied by Mme. Binchi, improved his shining hours by taking candid camera shots of the notables in the President's box: The Minister of Switzerland, looking to the left, surveyed with pride the building housing his country's exhibition.

Breakfast on the Congressional train was the first order of the day's program for the Nation's law-makers. From then on, Congressional "shop talk" could be heard up and down the train, as members of both Houses collected in clusters to discuss the Nation's business. A few, bent on making the most of a day's vacation, played poker and bridge. The car reserved for Senators and their wives took on the certain aspects of a Quaker meeting by the time the train reached Baltimore. Senator's wives were there, full force, but Senators themselves had scattered to the other cars and left the ladies alone. Mrs. William B. Bankhead, Mrs. Morris Sheppard, Mrs. Lister Hill, Mrs. Warren Austin, and Mrs. James J. Davis were among those who formed little chatting groups. Mrs. James H. Hughes had an inning all her own, when the train skimmed through Delaware and she identified landmarks for her fellow-travelers.

All in a day's merrymaking was the boarding of the morning buses "Bloom Specials," as somebody called them, that took the Congressional delegation from the train, skirting the Fair Ground and heading straight to the Federal Building. There, personally conducted by Representative Sol Bloom, the Speaker and Mrs. Bankhead were served luncheon in the flower-bordered patio. At the Speaker's table were Representative Edith Nourse Rogers, Representative and Mrs. Bloom. In any direction from there, one could see dignitaries, foreign and domestic, all over the place. Gold-braided admirals by dozens and scores, paraded through the glassed-in reception hall, where a lavishly laden buffet table lined one entire side of the room.

On the opposite side, looking over the patio, were a number of luncheon tables, surrounded by diplomats and members of their commissions to the World's Fair. The Polish Ambassador, Count Jerzy Potocki, and the Minister of Finland, Hjalmar J. Procope, were seen in the crowd. Outside in the patio the Minister of Rumania and Mme. Irimescu and the Minister of Czecho-Slovakia and Mme. Hurban were at the same table. Near them were the newly named Soviet Ambassador and Mme. Oumansky with a party. At another table were the Yugoslav Minister and Mme. Fotich and at still another were the Greek Minister, Demetrios Sicilianos and the Greek Consul General, Nicholas Lely.

Hours later, after the speechmaking and after the fair grounds had burst in their full glory, with all buildings illuminated with a vengeance, Senators and their wives, Representatives and their wives and the few extra passengers on the train were looking madly for that Congressional Special back to Washington. They found it and boarded it and were soon on their way, with no stops, to the Nation's Capital.

Weather Drives Outdoor Parties Indoors

Gen. and Mrs. Devore And Dutch Counselor Are Most Affected

This was a week-end of upset plans and last-minute changes—all because of the weather. Hostesses who had planned garden parties and hopefully hauled out chairs and tables onto verdant lawns had to drag them right back to the living room. Many hardy people who had sprung up early Saturday to drive to the Maryland Hunt Cup in Worthington Valley ended up by eating their picnic lunches in a steam-heated dining room and finding their afternoon amusement indoors over a cocktail.

Gen. and Mrs. Daniel DeVore held their "at home" yesterday inside instead of out, and so did the Counselor of The Netherlands Legation and Countess Van Rechteren Limpburg, who entertained on Saturday. At Countess Van Rechteren's party a few sporting souls ventured forth into the really lovely garden behind their home on Q street in Georgetown. They admired the beds of tulips in full bloom, but as the air was both damp and cold, everybody eventually ended up inside.

Van Rechterens Popular Hosts

The Netherlands Counselor and his pretty wife are among the most popular members of the Diplomatic Corps and like informal parties. The Countess herself, wearing a navy-blue print, helped to hand around the sandwiches and hors d'oeuvres. At present the Van Rechterens have staying with them an attractive young lady who arrived from Holland recently to take a job at the legation.

Seen here and there: Mrs. J. Pierrepont Moffat, who wore a navy-blue dress and small hat trimmed with wine-colored ostrich plumes, chatting with Miss Rebecca Wellington, also in navy blue, with a broadbrimmed white hat . . . Mme. Wankowicz, wife of the Polish Embassy Counselor, and the two secretaries, Rafal Lepkowski and Michal Budny, making attendance from that embassy almost 100 per cent . . . Mrs. Peter Goelet Gerry, wearing a smart brimless hat with a crown of white flowers, talking with Clarence Hewes . . . Mrs. C. Mathews Dick in a fuchsia outfit with turban to match . . . Her husband in earnest conversation with George Howe, the architect, and Mrs. Howe in a gray suit and small black hat, nearby.

Hamilton Bryan To Leave Shortly

Commander Hamilton Bryan told us that he leaves for sea duty the middle of May, and that Mrs. Bryan will probably join him on the West Coast for a while, though they will keep their Washington house open . . . Mr. and Mrs. Creighton Peet, Mr. and Mrs. Donald Hiss and Commander and Mrs. Anthony Coleby among those present who had canceled plans to attend the races . . . Ralph Hill sat with Mrs. Emmons Smith, who was a spring symphony in black and white . . . The Commercial Counselor of The Netherlands Legation and Mme. Molekamp, Countess Roberti, in a tweed suit; M. and Mme. Charles Lucet and Commander and Mme. Pierre Benech among those present from the Diplomatic Corps.

Mr. and Mrs. John Caswell, the latter wearing a smart white hat with her black dress, were others among the guests.

Diocesan Meeting Tomorrow

The Woman's Auxiliary of the Episcopal Diocese of Washington, will have its regular meeting at Christ Church, LaPlata, Md., tomorrow, beginning with communion service at 11 a. m. The rector, the Rev. Williams Curtis Draper, will be the celebrant. A business meeting will be held in the Parish Hall after a box lunch and Miss Cecelia Nelson, missionary of St. Andrews Community Center in Gloucester County, Va., will speak.

Danish Royalty At Hyde Park

Since Mrs. James Roosevelt, the President's mother, is the owner of the Hyde Park estate, all the entertaining there is given under her name. Thus, though officially the President and Mrs. Roosevelt were hosts at a dinner last night in honor of The Crown Prince and Crown Princess of Denmark and Iceland, the White House release names the President's mother as the hostess.

Following the dinner, the guests were entertained by Charlotte, a mezzo-soprano, and her accompanist, Franz Mittler, and by the Y. M. C. A. quartet of Salem College, Salem, W. Va. Charlotte sang an American folksong, "Dixieland," and several selections by Schubert, Brahms, Oscar Strauss, Joseph Strauss-Mittler, and Carrie Jacobs-Bond.

The visit to Hyde Park of the Crown Prince and Crown Princess of Denmark followed right on the heels of the stay of Crown Princess Martha and Crown Prince Olaf of Norway, who left the Hudson River estate yesterday morning. The Norwegian couple were guests of honor at a family picnic given yesterday by the President and Mrs. Roosevelt, and later the royal pair were entertained by a group of Norwegian dancers and singers.

Count Chiozza, Suzane Obici To Wed Here

Nobleman, Cousin Of the Late Pius X, Will Become Prince

A wedding uniting two old and prominent Italian families will take place here next month, when Miss Suzane Rita Obici, of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., a third cousin of the late Pope Pius X, becomes the bride of Count Antontello Chiozza di Loano of Trieste, Italy, scion of one of the oldest families in Europe. The exact date of the marriage is dependent upon the sailing of the count's relatives from Italy.

Miss Obici is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Obici, of Wilkes-Barre and a niece of Amadeo Obici, industrialist of Suffolk, Va. The latter, who is a collector of art treasures from all over the world, recently presented the University of Virginia with an Italian room. Miss Obici was graduated from the St. Anna Academy at Wilkes-Barre and also attended the College of New Rochelle in New York and William and Mary College, in Virginia. She is an accomplished linguist.

The wedding will take place in the chapel of Catholic University, with a representative of the Apostolic Delegation officiating. A reception for several hundred guests will follow at the Shoreham, where the Count has been making his home for the past six weeks.

Count Chiozza spent six months touring Canada and the United States before arriving in Washington, and it was during his travels that he met his fiancee. He is the grand-nephew of Princess Lina Giustiniani Avogli Trotti Estense, who was his grandfather's sister, and being her nearest male male relative, will inherit the title of Prince.

Count Chiozza's father, Count Pitro Giorgio Chiozza di Loano, is ill and will be unable to come to the wedding, but the younger Count's three aunts will sail from Italy early in June. They are Countess Stefania-Natalia Chiozza di Loano-Agiari, Countess Mercedes de Asarta Avogli Trotti, and Marchioness Gisella Villa Chiozza di Loano.

The party, who will stay at the Shoreham, will remain here for about a month, after which they will return to Italy, accompanied by the Count and his bride.

Count Chiozza has five extensive estates in Italy.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Thoughts of Wife's Early Transgression Drive Man To Drink; Marriage Is Threatened; What to Do?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I was one of six daughters reared in a Christian home. Our mother strove to the utmost to put foremost in our minds the mortal principles of cleanliness and decency of body and spirit. When I was 16, a man many years my senior tricked me into intimacy with him, and then left town for fear of prosecution. I later learned that he died in an accident. My eldest sister was the only one who knew about the episode. She advised me to let it blow over and no one would be the wiser.

At the time, I was corresponding with the man who is now my husband, knowing that I would one day marry him. I thought perhaps I should tell him what had happened, but decided against it, hoping he would never suspect, and would continue to look upon me as the same fine girl he had known and loved the two previous years. However, he did suspect, and when he confronted me with his suspicions I told him the truth and he was deeply hurt. He couldn't believe that a girl could be duped into such an experience, and became distrustful of me. . .

We have been married for three years and things don't seem to be getting any better. My husband drinks considerably and each time that he does, it dawns on him all the more that his wife was unfaithful and deceived him—which makes life miserable for us both. I love my husband and I believe he loves me in his doubting way, but I am not satisfied with that. I tell him that we can never build a stable future on a shaky past. But that barrier is between us.

Tell me, do you think that such a chasm can be bridged? We talked it over and agreed to ask your help. Will you advise us in the May 1 edition of The Post? Your suggestions will be appreciated. TROUBLED.

Inexcusable Attitude

DEAR TROUBLED: Tell your husband this, for me—you are the person sinned against. Two men in whom you placed a sheltered girl's pathetic trust have contrived, between them, to mangle your life pretty badly—the one, by damnable viciousness; the other, by almost inexcusable pettiness, ignorance and stupidity. Tell your husband, for me, that he does not yet know how to love; and that his attitude toward his wife is an unclean thing—suggesting an erotic state of mind, a narrow, shallow rigidity of spirit, and a poverty of understanding, that constitute far more of an offense against the laws of decency than your forlorn, isolated lapse.

Your husband would like to believe—and to have you believe, I suppose—that you have destroyed his faith in human nature. But tell him this: Faith in the decency of human nature cannot be destroyed in the breast of a man who is fundamentally decent himself. The man whose mind and soul are clean is a sucker to the bitter end for believing—in the face of all overt evidence to the contrary—that others are as fine as he is fine, and that whatever glancing mistakes they happen to make are incidental and unimportant manifestations of natural human imperfection; to be expected, evaluated and charitably dismissed as such.

The "barrier" which stands between you and your husband today stems not so much from your childish transgression, as from his sick state of mind. Another man, of more wholesome outlook would have reacted to the knowledge of your fall by the wayside with compassionate regret for the shock you had suffered, and with a generous and tender determination to make such amends as to erase the incident completely from your thoughts. But he would have been a person adequately stocked with self respect, or basic self esteem; emotionally mature, psychologically sound, reasonably sure of his personal worth and social attractiveness, and thus inclined to bring a contributive, rather than a hostile, suspicious or defensive attitude toward life.

If you would "build a sound future on the shaky past," the biggest engineering feat will have to do with clearing your husband's mind of the rubbish heap which his distorted thinking represents. That is a project which I cannot undertake here. It can best be done through collaborative efforts with psychiatrist or psycho-analyst; or perhaps his family physician would do, if the latter is sufficiently abreast of modern findings in the field of mental hygiene to be able to fathom and relieve his neurotic distress.

M.. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Dinette Suggestion

Here's an idea worth keeping in mind—a small dinette that wouldn't lend itself to any very important changes was refreshed a lot by the addition of seat slop-covers for the dining chairs—the fabric used was the same as that of the curtains, a crisp floral on a white ground. Just picture that in a room with aqua walls and pale maple furniture.

Windsor Chair At Its Best In America

English Original Was Heavy; Early U. S. Gave Design Grace

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

THE STORY goes that Thomas Jefferson wrote the Declaration of Independence in a Windsor chair, and there were 14 of them on the veranda at Mount Vernon. Like a lot of the rest of us, the Windsor chair has an English name, but really it's as American as Thanksgiving. For it was in the new world that the Windsor really came into its own.

The Wheel Design

Actually it was probably originated around Windsor Castle in England in the reign of Queen Anne—the work of wheelwrights or turners instead of cabinet makers, hence its spoke design. But the English Windsor remained a heavier, stolid sort of chair, with pierced splats—something like those heavy chairs you see in country hotel lobbies. The graceful, charming Windsors, as developed in America, are slender and delicate and thoroughly delightful. Philadelphia is responsible for the first American Windsors, but later most of the colonies took up the style and made their own versions.

Backs Varied

The Windsor is characteristically a chair of slender, spindled back, a solid-shaped seat and legs pegged directly into the seats. There art many variations, especially in the designs of the backs. There are comb backs, hoop backs, loop backs, fan backs. Seats are of solid wood or rush. Legs are nearly always turned and splayed and occasionally with rockers added. The familiar Boston rocker is an offshoot of the Windsor design. Sometimes there are writing shelves attached to the right arm. This is the type Jefferson was supposed to have used when writing the Declaration.

Most all the familiar woods have been used for Windsors at one time or another. Traditionally the seat was of pine or birch, the bent rail of beech, birch, hickory or ash, the turned legs and spindles of maple, ash, birch, oak or beech. Modern Windsors are most frequently in maple, walnut or mahogany.

Dash of Lemon Or Lime Lends Fruit Juice Zest

By Martha Ellyn,
The Post Food Editor.

OCEANS of fruit and vegetable juices are consumed yearly. Very interesting combinations can be achieved by experimenting with them a little. Sometimes a bit of lemon or a dash of lime, or a slice of orange points up the flavors of another food. Start a meal with chilled grape juice in combination with ginger ale, as suggested in the following menu.

Menu

Chilled grape juice and ginger ale
Hamburger shortcake
Fresh kale Baked squash
Escarole, Roquefort dressing
Orange custard Coffee

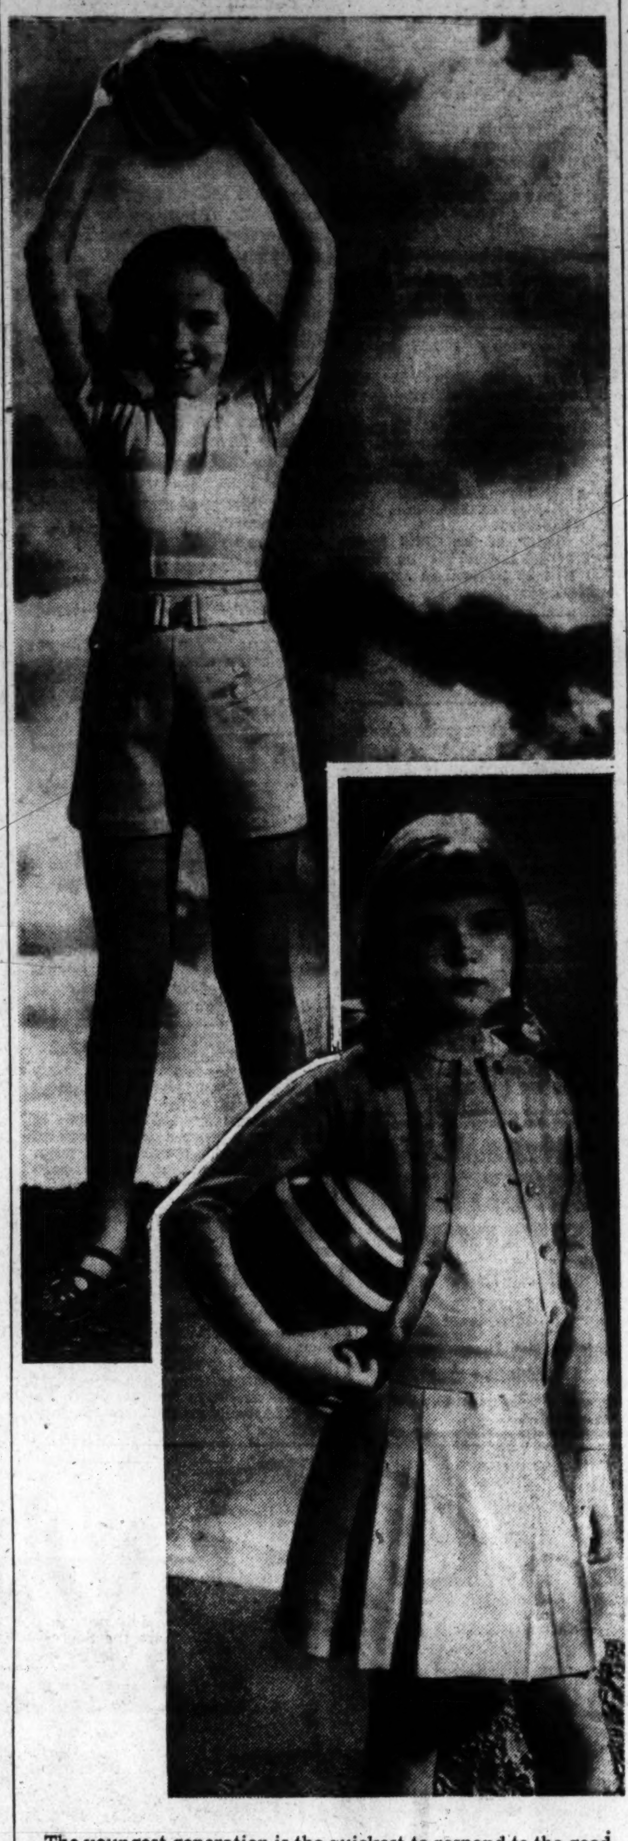
HAMBURGER SHORTCAKE

Mix ½-pound chopped beef with 2 tablespoons chopped onion and saute in 4 tablespoons butter for 5 minutes. Add salt and pepper, and 3 tablespoons flour, stirring until blended. Let come to a boil and boil 2 to 3 minutes. Serve between and over split biscuits. Serves 4.

Out of the Cups

To remove coffee, tea or choclate stains from cups rub well with a non-gritty cleansing powder applied with a soft cloth. Rinse in plenty of warm and cold water to remove all traces of the powder.

Children in the Sun



The youngest generation is the quickest to respond to the good old summer time. Even though showers and chill winds may prevail, it is always wise to be a bit in advance of the heat wave. Put your tots out in the sun in either of these vigorous little play outfits. The active sportswoman (above) wears cotton gabardine shorts in sunny yellow. Her aqua and white shirt is cotton knitted and wears like iron. The little girl with the pigtails is "miracle-matched," which means all her clothes are dyed to match. She owns a rosey pink lightweight woolen jersey with cardigan to match. Her botany flannel skirt buttons onto a white bodice top so that it stays put. An unforgettable way of observing National Child health week would be to stock up on a wardrobe of hardy play clothes like these

A Woman's New York

By Alice Hughes

Faith Bacon, Fan Dancer, Disturbs Quiet Murray Hill

New York, April 30.

THE MURRAY HILL neighborhood, where I live, is noted for its comparative peace and quiet in Manhattan's bedlam. Only the thud and the siren of the pie-cart from the Fifteenth Precinct station disturbs our traditional calm. Yet a week ago Sunday, seven days before the opening of the Fair, old Murray Hill's Sabbath peace was shattered in such a startling way that the Oldest Residents are still mumbling about it in their whiskers.

ALICE HUGHES

Right across the street from us is a pleasant apartment hotel presided over by Joe Dolby, veteran landlord. From its portals, at 1:15 p. m. on that sunny and fatal Sunday, issued Miss Faith Bacon, the eminent fan-dancer, leading a very scared and startled fawn. Faith, as you know, performs a fawn dance at the Big Show, and this was a publicity build-up of the old school. She was surrounded by press agents, and reporters and cameramen, who in some miraculous way had turned up. And since the eminent artist was dressed only in a chiffon veil and some leaf-dotted fleshings, she was also surrounded, in 'arf or mo', by several hundred passersby, sightseers and shocked Murray Hillbillies.

Faith was shivery, and the fawn was frightened, and to the horror of her press agents, policemen who sauntered up failed to rush her off to the calaboose—which was the whole idea. At last the whole lot of them managed to get safely pinched, and the next day La Bacon coyly faced Judge Brodsky. Officer McIassac, who made the belated arrest, couldn't swear whether the crowd was gaping at Faith or at the terrified fawn. "I think they were looking at me," said Miss Bacon, with a becoming blush. I think she was right. Disorderly conduct charge dismissed—stories and pictures in the papers. A fine howdy-do for our dear old neighborhood. These fandangoes are all right for Broadway, but not for us on the Hill. Wonder what our neighbor, J. P. Morgan, thought of these didoes?

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—Speaking of the Fair, the big-time magazine cover artists have just come up with a whizzer. "Significant Nudity," they call it. Significant of what, tootsies? Anyhow, such people as Neysa McMein, McClelland Barclay and John Lagatta plan a show of living magazine covers for the Midway, using Enamar MacDonald, a curvey cutie, and others, to pose for imaginative magazine covers kidding certain phases of American life. Six pretty pals, six minutes of show, 25 cents, the quarter part of a dollar—thank you, folks. Kindly move out the exit to let the fresh lot of customers in.

Artists Planning 'Artistic' Nudes For Fair

ROBBERS took a mighty long chance fussing with us ladies these days. A few days ago two varmints held up Mrs. Martha Jacobs in her little candy store uptown. One held a gun on Mrs. Jacobs while the other plucked $15 from the till. Ignoring the pistol, the lady took a length of lead pipe and brought it down on the trigger-man's noggin. That ended the stick-up. Both fiends got away, but no doubt one of them had a splitting headache for a week, Attagirl, Mrs. J.

Tow to Go On a Garden Tour

(A Catechism)

Q.—What does one wear on a garden pilgrimage

A.—One wears any form of dressy afternoon ensemble with high-heeled opera pumps (and, of course, a silver fox scarf if the day is coolish)—in fact any outfit appropriate for drinking tea on the terrace.

Q.—Does one always drink tea on the terrace?

Q.—But is one not supposed to wander in the garden?

Q.—How far?

A.—Just far enough to see the vista.

Q.—What does one remark about the vista?

A.—The vista may be "marvelous," "lovely," "breath-taking," but preferably "divine."

Q.—What does one do on arriving in the garden?

Q.—How does on rhapsodize?

A.—That is too elementary a question. However, it might well be remembered that all gardens are "charming."

Q—What does one next do?

A—One exclaims about the "superb old box."

Q—Is all boxwood "superb"?

Q—How old?

A—That is for the pilgrim to guess. The first qualification for a successful garden pilgrim is to be able to state with authority the exact age of the box.

Q—But if one cannot guess?

A—One asks a gardener and then omnisciently relays the information to other tourists.

Q—How does one spot a gardener?

More Age Guesing

Q—What does one next do in the garden?

A—One admires the house and speculates where the master bedroom is located, how many serv ants are employed, and how many cars the garage holds.

Q—May one remark that the house is "interesting historically"?

A—All houses in Washington are interesting historically. However, the experienced garden pilgrim will be able to state authoritatively the exact age of the house.

Q—Does one go in the house?

Q—When does the garden pilgrim look at the flowers?

A—Just after exclaiming that the place is a "Paradise of Birds."

Q—What does the pilgrim say about the flowers?

A—That the primulas are unusually lovely this year, that the cinerareas are such a gorgeous blue and that she simply adores the schizanthus.

Q—But suppose she cannot remember the names?

A—She must memorize them. However, in an emergency she may remark that she has never seen such "a profusion of blossoms," or that she has "always loved flowers." Or she can demand to see the herb garden.

Q—What does she say at the herb garden?

Technique on the Terrace

Q—When does one drink tea on the terrace?

A—As soon as possible.

Q—What does one talk about on the terrace?

A—How "heavenly" the day is (provided it is not raining), what "old world atmosphere" the place has, of course the age of the box, possibly also the merits of English and Irish yew.

Q—What does one say about the yew?

A—It is usually safe to say (provided no Sinn Feiners are present) that the Irish yew is a little more straggly than the English.

Q—What else does one say on the terrace?

A—One discusses the outfits of the other pilgrims.

Q—What does one say about them?

A—That they are "simply stunning."

Q—Is that all that one says on the terrace?

A—No, one remarks how wonderful it was of Mrs. Whoosis to open her garden and share all this beauty.

Q—Does one see Mrs. Whoosis?

A—Certainly not! Mrs. Whoosis is either in Europe or at her place down in the country.

Q—When does one leave the garden?

A—After greeting all acquaintances and remarking that the place is "too heavenly to leave."

Q—Where does one next go?

A—To the next garden on the pilgrimage.

Q—What does one do there?

High Calorie Foods and Lack of Exercise Are Largely Cause of Modern Man's Obesity

IF YOU tip the scales at 20 per cent more than specified by the actuarial tables for a man of your height and build, you are obese—to put it bluntly—and bringing your weight more closely to normal would improve your health and increase your efficiency.

You may, it is true, be able to point to the fact that you are considerably overweight and at the same time "as healthy as an ox," and, furthermore, that you have "never been ill a day in your life." I hope that you can! But the seriousness with which excessive weight is treated by the medical profession should make you less willing to tolerate such a positive handicap to your well being.

Most men seem to average only about 50 pounds of excess weight but in clinical cases, in which the unnecessary poundage frequently amounts to 200 pounds.

May Cut Blood Pressure

In addition, excessive weight is considered a complicating factor in many diseases. It is estimated that about one out of every three diabetics is overweight and, as emphasized by a medical authority on obesity, it has been pointed out that in the case of the individual whose family has a diabetic inheritance, the possibility of developing the disease is five times as great if he is obese.

It is only when the storage of fat becomes excessive that obesity exists, but the changing times make it increasingly easier for a man to take on too much fat. For example, our doctor at the clinic declares that while the average man does much less work—that is, of the kind involving physical activity—than his forebears, there has been no adjustment in his diet corresponding to his lessened energy needs

Gland Rarely the Cause

On the contrary, the consumption of high calorie foods is greater than formerly. In 1830, the average person in this country used about 55 pounds of sugar in a year. In 1930, the average was 109 pounds per person or about 2 pounds a week. And don't forget that the average man today depends on mechanical devices to do the manuel labor for him!

The administration of thyroid has been found necessary in so few cases that you can practically dismiss the possibility of a glandular disturbance as the cause of your overweight. No matter how much or how little your excess is, or how long you have carried it, the means of reducing is simple: Restrict your calorie intake.

If you are greatly overweight, it would be wise for you to check your physical condition with your doctor and have him approve your diet and exercise program. Unless you are physically unable to take exercise, it should be included in your scheme for reducing. At one of the leading New York clinics, the doctors advise two 15-minute periods of exercise a day, one at night and one in the morning, and a brisk 2-mile walk daily. The walking is gradually increased to 5 miles.

Bishop Denny Ignores Union Of Methodists

Methodists

believed the general conference should be possessed of power to require "an adherence to the particular political, social and economic views of a majority of the conference." The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, he wrote, was formed by those "who denied that position."

"To become a part of this new church is to accept substantially everything against which the fathers of my church protested; is to deny substantially everything which they maintained. This I cannot do . . ."

Although the union of the three churches has been effected, Bishop Denny predicted the Southern Church would continue to exist.

Consecrate Bishops

Kansas City, April 30 (AP).—The United Methodist Church, in a simple ceremony symbolic of the healing of a schism 111 years old, today consecrated two bishops from the former Protestant division, which split from the main church body in 1828.

Bishop James H. Straughn of Baltimore, president of the general conference of the Protestant branch, and Bishop John Calvin Bloomfield of Fairmont, W. Va., a former president, were consecrated in a service before 8,000 persons at the municipal auditorium.

The ceremony climaxed the first week of the month-long uniting conference here to work out a system of government for the new church of approximately 8,000,000 members.

The bishops-elect and consecrating bishops were cloaked in black academic gowns as they stood before a lighted cross and rows of other church bishops. The ritual, said to date from the sixteenth century, was that of the Methodist Episcopal Church, but differed little from that of the Southern denomination.

Consecrators for the ceremony were Bishops Edwin H. Hughes of Washington, John M. Moore of Dallas, Paul B. Kern of Nashville and E. Lester Smith of Cincinnati. Assisting in the service were Dr. George R. Brown of Liberty, N. C.; Dr. E. A. Sixsmith of Baltimore, and Dr. T. Leroy Hooper and Dr. Clarence L. Daugherty, both of Pittsburgh.

Health Week in other years in prenatal care, health examinations and needs of small babies.

"We are not trying to minimize the work that always has to be done in correction of physical defects, treatment of diseases and warding off diseases," she said. "But the growing child is singled out because good food during the growing years is of exceptional importance."

As typical of the work that can be done by correct nutrition, Mrs. Grant selected Katherine Elizabeth and Mary Patricia Collins, young daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Peter L. Collins, 3604 Macomb street. Neither has ever been ill and each is a picture of health and beauty. Their mother did it all with proper feeding, regular rest and play.

The food eaten by Katherine Elizabeth, who is almost 6, and her younger sister, is simple and fed regularly. Before breakfast they have a glass of orange juice and at each meal they have toast and milk. Neither child ever has eaten untoasted bread — their mother pointing out that toast is better for growing teeth and also more easily digested.

In addition to orange juice, toast and milk, breakfast for the Collins children always includes a cooked cereal. They have no inbetweens during the morning.

Main Meal Includes Chops

Their main meal, at noon, includes a chop—of any meat except ham or pork—a baked potato, a green vegetable (it does not have to be spinach!) and a jello, junket or simple pudding dessert.

In midafternoon they have orange juice or milk with simple graham or arrowroot crackers. After this, Mary Patricia sleeps and Katherine Elizabeth rests.

For their evening meal the little girls have a stewed fruit such as prunes, apples or apricot; a dried cereal with milk, if it's summer, or a soft boiled egg; custard again, and toast and milk. Neither has ever eaten fried foods.

They sleep from 7 p. m. until 7 a. m., play in the open every day. Their daily consumption of milk averages 1½ pints each.

A joint luncheon of representatives of District health agencies will be held today. Girl Scouts of the District have announced that chapters will see approximately ten health and safety films.

2,300 Army Officers Face Retirement

Woodring Favors Move for Younger Commanders

By the Associated Press.

The Army's proposed elimination of overage and physically unfit commanders forecasts the retirement in the next seven years of more than 2,300 high ranking officers who otherwise would remain in active service.

Official experts agreed on the tentative figure yesterday after studying an Administration bill submitted to Congress by Secretary Woodring as a means of "vitalizing" the expanding Army.

Urging its prompt approval, Woodring asserted that "the United States is the only power which has not recognized the need of younger officers for command."

"A half million dollars expended annually to 'modernize' our officer personnel will be as valuable a contribution to the national defense as the procurement of additional modern armament," he added.

Proposal Unexpected

The proposal was put forward last week unexpectedly, but had been under study for years by general staff experts.

The 2,300-odd officers marked for involuntary retirement on three-quarters pay would be in addition to those who, on the basis of existing actuarial tables, would be expected to die in the meantime or quit the service for disability or other reasons regardless of the projected stricter standards.

All are in the upper grades of captain, major, lieutenant colonel, colonel and brigadier general.

A prospective result of the weeding-out process would be to increase materially the promotion chances of youthful lieutenants already commissioned or to be added as the army expands as a result of increases already authorized under the administration's $552,000,000 emergency arms program.

How Plan Would Work

To put the plan into effect, brigadier generals of 62 would be required to retire, along with colonels who had attained the age of 60, lieutenant colonels of 58, majors of 55 and captains who were 50. These age limits might be altered later.

In addition, Secretary Woodring decreed stringent examinations for all officers of the rank of captain or above before June 30 and recommended similar tests for national guardsmen.

Official actuarial tables forecast the retirement by mid-1945 of 499 brigadier generals and colonels, 243 lieutenant colonels, 710 majors and 877 captains as a result of the legislation.

lice found 5,000 number slips in the automobile. Attorneys for the two argued that the police had no right to search the automobile. Justice Adkins ruled that, under the circumstances, the search was justified, and a jury brought in a verdict of guilty. The men are to be sentenced later.

"That conviction ought to help us considerably," aj. Brown said yesterday. "Some of these number runners have been under the impression that the mere possession of numbers slips was not prima facie evidence of guilt. This ought to change their minds and act as a deterrent."

Maj. Brown was asked his opinion of the general situation. Had the elimination of the Warring kingpins had any effect?

"Undoubtedly a lot of people are still playing the numbers," the police chief said. "I'd like to think the play has been curtailed, but there is no way to prove it."

Child Rites Lend Color At Cathedral

1,000 Present Lenten Offerings From 50 Episcopal Parishes Here

Gathering yesterday at the Cathedral to present their annual Diocesan Church School Lenten offering, more than 1,000 Episcopal children of the Washington area were urged by the Right Rev. James E. Freeman, Bishop of Washington, to be "real witnesses for Christ."

Representatives of 50 parishes, including vested singers from 25 junior choirs, they marched into the sanctuary in a colorful procession, led by standard-bearers carrying flags of several nations, symbolizing the missionary spirit. More than 2,000 adults witnessed the ceremony.

Praises St. Mark's Rector

Also participating in the procession were the clerics of the Cathedral, headed by the Bishop; the Cathedral choir of men and boys, and rectors of parishes, among them the Rev. William R. Moody, director of the department of religious education of the diocese, who presided.

Bishop Freeman, in his address, paid tribute to accomplishments of the Rev. Mr. Moody, rector of St. Mark's, who will leave shortly to assume a pulpit in Baltimore.

After the singers had taken their places in the great choir, the child-delegates filed into seats in the nave, later carrying their offerings to the altar, where Bishop Freeman received them in the name of the diocese.

Winners Announced

Winners in a diocesan poster contest entitled: "Where Does Our Money for Missions Go?" four of the youthful missioners were presented with prayer books by Bishop Freeman. They were George Francis Race, St. John's, Sixteenth and H streets; Marie Wilson, St. Thomas', Croom, Md.; Edgar Farr Russell, All Souls, and Betty Woodward, St. Thomas, Washington.

Also participating in the program, in addition to the delegates, were the Very Rev. Noble C. Powell, dean of the cathedral; the Rev. Edward Gabler, rector of Christ Church, southeast, and Canon Precenter William R. Bradner.

In his address, Bishop Freeman described the service as the "most colorful, interesting and hopeful program held at the cathedral for 12 months." Such demonstrations give new hope for the future of the church, he said.

Mend That Dented Fender Or Car May Fail in Inspection

Anything Can Happen, Safety Expert Says, and That Defect In Auto Could Cause a Death

By Howard F. Wentworth.

"What's dangerous about a dented fender?" asked a motorist as he glanced over items to be rejected under the District's new annual compulsory automobile inspection law. "I've got one on my car and it hasn't hurt anyone yet."

He was probably right. The fender hasn't hurt anyone—yet. But dented fenders, if left to corrode, may someday bring injury or possibly death to an innocent person. That's why authorities are going to cast a critical eye at fender defects when mandatory auto inspections begin June 1.

Anything Can Happen

A minor dent is nothing to particularly worry a car owner—and it usually doesn't. But anything can happen. Let's take a typical fender mar. It might have resulted from brushing another car while backing into a parking space. The motorist fails to give it another thought.

Months may pass and the driver still overlooks the dent, which by then has become a ragged split on the outer side of a rear fender. During a rush-hour period downtown, when pedestrian traffic is heavy, the car owner is perhaps in a hurry to reach home.

His speed may be moderate and he may have his car under control, but by chance he happens to come too close to a group of pedestrians on a crosswalk. And here the ragged fender dent gets in its evil work. A woman's dress—or man's coat—is snagged as the motorist goes by. He is unaware anything has occurred until too late—the pedestrian has been hurled to the street and possibly dragged hundreds of feet. The result is injury, at least, and death at worst.

Fenders Must Be Repaired

"We are going to insist that all fender dents with any indication of becoming ragged or torn be repaired before an auto passes inspection," said J. Earl Steinhauer, chief of the annual examination service. "There is no damage so trivial that it might not become dangerous. Our job is to see that it doesn't."

A driver is no better than the car he drives, say safety exponents. The motorist with a long no-accident record, who prides himself on being an expert behind the steering wheel, may receive a sudden jolt to his pride by a loose bolt, burned out light or even a broken bumper.

Washington, under its compulsory inspection system, is determined to rid the streets of unfit and dangerous vehicles.

Police Say Man Admits Killing Shinault

Confesses Slaying Seven Years Ago, Darnall Announces

Willie Bullock, colored, 30, under indictment for the seven-year-old murder of Policeman George W. Shinault, last night signed a statement admitting the killing, Lieut. George Darnall, chief of the homicide squad, announced.

According to Lieut. Darnall, Bullock said he ran from the house in the 100 block of F street northwest where Shinault was shot down and joined the curious crowd milling in front. He fled to New York, Darnall said, when he learned Shinault was dead.

He confessed, Darnall said, that he was attempting to force his common-law wife, at pistol point, to return after a quarrel when neighbors called police. Shinault and Private R. D. Edwards, cruising four blocks away in a radio scout car answered the call and Shinault went down an embankment to the house.

Before he had an opportunity even to speak, Darnall said Bullock told him, the colored man fired.

Bullock was brought to Washington a half-dozen times on the murder charge. He was released each time because of an error in his fingerprint classification which, police said, has since been rectified. He was finally taken into custody at Newark last Thursday.

Shinault was slain slightly more than a month after he killed William J. Hushka, a member of the bonus army that invaded Washington in the summer of 1932.

Pickpocket Gets $12; Two Women's Purses Snatched

A pickpocket yesterday robbed William Murphy, 3500 Thirteenth street northwest, of his wallet containing $12.

Mrs. C. Bickford, of 1227 Nineteenth street northwest, reported to police that early yesterday morning as she entered her home a man snatched her purse containing $4. She said that at first she believed the man to be colored, but has now changed her mind and thinks he was a white man wearing a mask and gloves.

Another purse snatching netted a thief $27. Susie Jones, colored, of 242 P street northwest, reported that while walking on O street, between North Capitol and First streets northwest, a colored man grabbed her purse and fled down an alley.

O'Conor Names Mary Risteau To Loan Post

First Woman House Member in Md. Gets $4,000 Position

By the Associated Press.

Annapolis, Md., April 30.—The first appointment of a woman to head a major State office was made today when Gov. O'Conor named former State Senator Mary Risteau, of Harford County, commissioner of loans.

Miss Risteau will take over the $4,000-a-year post tomorrow for a four-year term.

The office was placed under the State banking commissioner's office by the last Legislature, but will be operated as a separate department.

Miss Risteau, of Jarrettsville, Md., represented Harford County in the State Senate in 1937.

She was elected to the House of Delegates in 1921, the first woman ever to serve there. After serving several years she was elected clerk of the Harford County Circuit Court. She later returned to the House of Delegates and advanced to the Senate in 1937.

She forsook the Senate race last autumn to run again for the court clerk's job, but was defeated.

Capital News In Brief

Defines Youth's Call

The call of youth today is for new leadership and a new purpose in life, the Rev. J. T. Edwards, pastor of the First Baptist Church, where he is conducting a revival.

Youth always has played an important role in the affairs of the world, he said, citing the accomplishments of Christ, Alexander, Hannibal, Joan of Arc and Patrick Henry. The cleric, who was introduced by the Rev. Charles B. Austin, pastor, speaks daily through Thursday at 8 p. m.

J. J. Darlington Honored

A bronze bas-relief of Joseph James Darlington was unveiled yesterday at Fifth Baptist Church, where he was for years teacher of the Darlington Berea Bible Class.

Accepted on behalf of the church by C. Clinton James, chairman of the board of deacons, the memorial was unveiled by Virginia Darlington Kirby Smith, great-granddaughter of both Mr. Darlington and Gen. Edmund Kirby Smith, of the Confederate army.

Got Fool-Proof Firebox?

Wanted: a fool-proof false alarm preventor by the Washington Fire Department.

In April, 31 out of 171 box alarms or almost 19 per cent were false. The previous month, 48 out of 202, or almost one-quarter, were phonies. The department, to put it mildly, is irked, and, what is worse, despairs of ever finding a successful method of preventing witless jokers from playing prospectively lethal gags.

Train Director Retires After 32 Years—He's Going Fishing

John Feeney is going fishing.

At midnight last night, in "A" tower of the Union Station, Feeney pulled a couple of levers which threw a couple of switches and lit a few lights, shouted something into an interoffice telephone and watched the C. & O. southbound limited speed out of the station. He thus ended 49 years of working on the railroad.

Feeney, 65, a resident of Kensington, Md., leaves, he said, with no regrets. "I want to have a little timeo f my own, and see what it's like to be without a boss. Besides, I've always wanted to have time to go hunting and fishing. I've seen all the trains I ever want to."

The veteran at the control board recalled that his first days at the levers were the worst. Only six months after he became a train director, President Taft was inaugurated in one of Washington's worst snow storms. Inaugural trains were stalled from here to Baltimore. Telephone wires were down. Aspirin consumption was up.

The tradition of railroading will be kept going in the Feeney family, however. His son, John W. Feeney, is carrying on as assistant train director at the terminal, the same job his father has held for 32 years. The elder Feeney has handled an average of 65 train movements a day for 313 days a year in the 32 years without a single accident or tangle. His final score: No hits, no errors and about 630,000 runs.

G. U. Reports Strong Quake In China Sea

An earthquake which set seismographic needles wavering from two to three times as wildly as did the Chilean tremors last January 24 was recorded early yesterday at Georgetown University.

Father F. W. Sohon, seismology director, estimated the quake at about 8,600 miles from Washington, but admitted he might be "about five degrees" (350 miles) in error.

The tremor began at 10:10 p. m. Saturday, reached its maximum intensity at 11:02 p. m. and ended about 3 a. m. Sunday.

Father Sohon noted that the curves on two of the three seismographs—the vertical and the north-south instruments—were closely correlated. He therefore located the quake on the north-south line. The only earthquake center area on such a projection at that distance woud be in the China Sea.

Va. Power Co-operative Opens New Line Bids

St. Charles, Va., April 30 (AP).—The Powell Valley Electric Co-operative opened bids yesterday for construction of 129 miles of rural electric lines. The Kingsbury-Samuel Electric Co. of Baltimore was low bidder.

Davis L. McNeil, superintendent of the Rural Power Project, said the system would make current available for the first time to some 900 farm homes in Lee and Scott counties.

Hagerstown To Thresh Out Court Issue

Town Meeting Set For Tomorrow Night On Question of Site

By the Associated Press.

Hagerstown, Md., April 30.—Hagerstown residents will assemble tomorrow night to argue over where to build a new courthouse if PWA decides to help construct it.

The controversy, chief sidewalk topic for weeks, has reached the petition point, so a group of businessmen called the meeting to restore harmony.

Three petitions are reported, all asking that the new courthouse be built on the site of the present one.

One petition already is in circulation; representatives of several business concerns are drafting another to present to the board of county commissioners, and a third group is drawing referendum petitions to be circulated in case another site is approved by the board.

Persons favoring a new site argue that the county could get a good price for the present courthouse site, and that if the prsesent site is selected offices will have to be rented during the period of construction, thus adding to the expenses of the project.

A formal application for PWA funds has been sent to Washington.

Mayoralty Aspirant Quits at Emmitsburg

Emmitsburg, Md., April 30.—Interest in the town election for mayor was at a low ebb today since announcement of the withdrawal of James T. Hays as candidate for the office. Clarence G. Frailey running for a post on the board of commissioners also withdrew. Incumbent Mayor M. J. Thompson will be unopposed at the election Monday.

D. C. Masons Hear Plea by Dr. Anderson

Rededication Urged 'To Cherished Ideals' As Order Pays Honor To Constitution

A plea for America to rededicate himself to "cherished ideals' was voiced yesterday by Dr. Howard Stone Anderson as his First Congregationalists joined with other local churchmen in welcoming Masonry to services marking the 150th anniversary of the Constitution's adoption and Washington's inauguration.

Other leading rites were centered at Foundry and other Methodist churches, St. Stephen's Evangelical Luthern, First Baptist, Third Christian, St. John's Episcopal and scores of other shrines, wth the latter rites closely resembling that attended by Washington in St. Paul's Chapel, New York City, after his inauguration.

Addressing members of Hope Lodge, No. 20; Barrister's Lodge, No. 48, and Lafayette Lodge, No. 19, Dr. Anderson advised that "we need to discover and rededicate ourselves to those things which we cherish, and which stand out sharply in contrast to the 'privileges' of certain other countries."

Discussing "Freemasonry and the Great Commandment," the Rev. Harvey Goddard, Barristers' chaplain, pointed out that, in striving for Christian unity and cooperation, Freemasons are ever in the lead.

At St. John's—historic "Church of the Presidents"—Dr. Oliver J. Hart, greeting members of the Cincinnati Society and Temple-Noyes Lodge, praised Washington as one whose philosophy was that of giving, not getting, and whose faith was vital and living. Maj. Gist Blair, president of the Cincinnati Society, and Col. Peyton G. Nevitt, of the District National Guard, Master of Temple-Noyes Lodge, were guests.

Masons to Lay Stone

Frederick, Md., April 30.—Cornerstone of the $350,000 Frederick High School building will be laid at Masonic ceremonies at 4 p. m. tomorrow, Robert L. Warfield, president of the County Board of Education, announced today. Members of Lynch and Columbia lodges will march from Masonic Temple to the site led by the high school band.

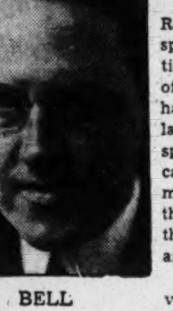
Maurice Evans Soars Again in 'Henry IV'

His Falstaff Proves Marvel of Versatility; Cecil De Mille to Ride in on Trick Train; News Notes and Gossip of the Theater

WITH THE PERFORMANCE of the role of Sir John Falstaff in Shakespeare's historical comedy of "Henry IV," Part I, last Saturday afternoon and evening, in the National Theater, Maurice Evans completed—at least for the time being—his Washington gallery of stage portraitures. The nature of the portrayal of this robustious role was such as to place Mr. Evans definitely among the great of the contemporary theater.



BELL

Washington saw Maurice Evans first as the Romeo to Katharine Cornell's Juliet in Shakespeare's classic love tragedy, and for the first time in years felt the impetuosity and vibrance of youth pulsating through a play that too often had been bogged down by recitationists wholly lacking in spontaneity and any semblance of the spirit and ardency of impassioned youth. Then came "St. Helena," in which Mr. Evans did marvels with a series of vignettes, dealing with the later life of Napoleon; then "Richard II," then last week's full-text version of "Hamlet," and, on the last day of the week, "Henry IV."

Here is a record that bespeaks the utmost in versatility and productional courage. Mr. Evans played all of his divergent roles with equal distinction. He possesses an unique malleability of mind and method that seems to make any task behind the footlights a simple one for him. Personally, he is a genial and gracious young man upon whom, once the grease paint is swabbed off, remains none of the traces of the actor. One wonders in casual conversation with him what may be the source of his inspirational playing once the lights are on and the play is under way. We probably would have wondered the same thing about all of the theater's great had we known them. Some call it genius. Maybe that is what it is.

The Sir John Falstaff that was revealed by Mr. Evans on the stage Saturday was a collossal fellow. I do not refer to his girth as much as to his fine projection of the instincts of a gentleman born to a shady renown and the subtle suggestion that underneath all his tavern roistering Sir Jack was a man of substance. As Mr. Evans played him, this bombastic and voluble figure was completely lovable. A little of the rogue in him, yes, but also many of the virtues that an utter profligacy could only slightly obscure. Until I had seen his portrayal, I never was able to visualize Maurice Evans in this role. Now I recognize him for the supreme artist that he is.

Like the full-length "Hamlet," "Henry IV" was an impeccably staged and superbly acted production. Mr. Evans' acting company was one of peculiar adaptability. Many of the cast who did so much for the integrity of "Henry IV" had done equally notable service in the interpretation of the Bard's greatest play during the earlier days of the week. Particularly notable were the performances Saturday night of Henry Edwards, as King Henry IV; Edmond O'Brien, as Henry Prince of Wales; Wesley Addy, as Henry Percy, "Hotspur," and Mady Christians, in the brief but impressive role of Lady Percy, his wife. Mr. Addy, who had played Laertes all week in "Hamlet," offered a tremendously vibrant and moving impersonation of the one character in "Henry IV" that might be deemed Falstaff's rival for first honors. Miss Christians in her scenes with him displayed a sense of comedy no less brilliant than the tragic moods she is able to command in parts of more serious import.

It is pleasant to record that every member of the company rendered an accounting of his part that made "Henry IV" one of the priceless treats of the season.

It is not so pleasant, but a little in the nature of news, to report that Mr. Evans and his company closed their spring tour in this city on Saturday night. There was a thought for a time that a revival of "Hamlet" and "Henry IV" might prosper on Broadway with the coming of the World's Fair influx of visitors, but Mr. Evans has canceled that. His notion is that visitors to the World's Fair will be visitors to the World's Fair and not much concerned with those portions of New York lying north of Flatbush.

And there is the matter of that "Tuppence" fellow, Mr. Evans' pet pooch. It seems that I insulted "Tuppence" by calling him a Cairn when he is, in fact, a Yorkshire terrier. When we barged in on Maurice again Thursday night, he warned me that "Tuppence" almost had written me a letter that day and was pretty sore about the whole thing. And sure enough, having been so friendly about the whole business on Tuesday night, what did "Tuppence" do but greet me with the most ominous of growls. And to make it all worse, he made immediate friends with the contradictory and provocative creature I had taken back to meet Mr. Evans as one of his greatest admirers! Life, as I have said many times before, is like that.

"Stage Door," a success on both the stage and the screen, to be presented by the Pierce Hall Players on May 10 and 11, will employ the largest cast of characters ever presented under Pierce Hall auspices. Director Howard Wentworth has women in his hair! There are 22 of them in this comedy-drama of New York backstage life, in addition to 10 male principals. Director Wentworth says that if all of his cast ever reports for rehearsal at the same time, he will drop dead. That would be a loss to the Pierce Hall Players.

Cecil B. De Mille, among the foremost of the Hollywood producer-directors, will pay Washington another visit—he has been here several times before—next week aboard the "Union Pacific Exhibit Train," which was one of the highlights of the three-day "Golden Spike Celebration," at Omaha, Nebr., over the week-end. "Union Pacific" would be by way of being the next attraction at the Earle Theater, incidentally.

Accompanying Mr. De Mille will be a group of Hollywood celebrities who were more or less—mostly more—mixed up in the making of the picture. This group will include Lynne Overman, former Washington stock player; Akim Tamiroff, Evelyn Keyes, Sheila Darcy, Julia Faye, who once had the most beautiful legs on the West Coast and probably still has; Judith Allen and Evelyn Luckey.

Heading the train will be the "Old Fifty-eight," a woodburning engine of the 1870s, still said to be capable of turning up 60 miles an hour. Directly behind it will be the last word in modern railroading, the newsteam-electric turbine locomotive, which is the only one of its kind in the world. This powerful engine—it develops 5,000 horsepower and weighs 268 tons—can pull 12 cars at a speed of 125 miles per hour.

If I am to visit this hybrid steam train, in which Lucius Beebe ought to take keen interest, I hope Mr. De Mille has not rigged it up with all of the gadgets that made that fabulous old "Forty-second Street Special" such a severe tax on the nerves.

"Smoke Gets in Your Eyes."

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Calif., April 30.—Casting offices are no respectors of honeymoon. Young Doug was to start "Ruler of the Seas" Tuesday, but was called for Monday. Our Hollywood columnists were pretty upset when the only writer allowed at Doug's wedding was Elsa Maxwell. But maybe she got in as an actress. Doug gave Bride Mary a diamond cross. Something to cling to. Little Jeanie Chester, one of the most beautiful girls I've ever seen, but who's had the toughest tussle with infantile paralysis, caught the bridal bouquet.

HOPPER

So that everyone could take part in all the festivities yesterday when "Union Pacific" opened in Omaha, Bishop Ryan obtained a special dispensation from the Holy See allowing Catholics to eat meat. I can hear some grumblers muttering: "Oh, Hollywood influence again." No, my friends, this time it came from Rome.

As one writer put it, poor Dotty Lamour "with her big eyes brimful of tears, tried to be brave" when she lost her Herbie Kay. But dried them quickly when she got Phyllis Laughton to coach her in "Disputed Passage." Phyllis does the same service for that other dark-eyed beauty, Hedy LaMarr, who plays a half-caste. Hedy begged to have Phyllis coach her for her last one. But neither she nor the studio would pay for that service. However, when "I Take This Woman" was shelved to the tune of $900,000, someone saw the light, because Miss Laughton is on the set every day.

Husbands come and go, but careers wait for no woman.

We no longer laugh at Sam Goldwyn's "include me out" Goldwynisms. He just put "Wuthering Heights,' together with many stills from the picture, into book form for 39 cents.

Hollywood is reading "Heil Hollywood," by Jack Preston, through shatter-proof glass. Talk about dynamite—this is more like the new death ray. It's the most daring, inside, hell-bent-for-better-conditions book I've ever read. Understand he's been forced to change the title. No matter what they call it, don't fail to read it.

We're losing three of our nicest Britishers. Consul Francis E. Evans and Mrs. Evans will be sadly missed, also the Earl of Warwick, who, however, will return to us in four months. Evans said, "Diplomatic life isn't always happy. There's nothing more cruel than leaving good friends."

John Garfield, because he's so good, is Warners' problem cheild. They've lined up three B pictures for him, knowing all the time that he should do nothing but A's. But he needs a special type of story and where, oh where, to find the writers. For 10 per cent I'll send over my list.

Rudy Vallee switches girls so fast that our Chamber of Commerce should make a deal with him, so their slogan could be: Tour the Studios during the Day; Dine and Dance with Vallee at Night.

The music played for Louis B. Mayer at the studio party the other night was a song especially written for the occasion—"Facing the Crowd."

AN ANCIENT LOCOMOTIVE STARS IN DE MILLE FILM

The "J. W. Bowker," woodburner, owned by the Railway and Locomotive Historical Society, plays the role of "General McPherson," the Union Pacific's first engine, in Cecil B. De Mille's production of "Union Pacific," to be seen next week on the screen at the Earle Theater. The "General" is steaming away here to rescue Joel McCrea, Barbara Stanwyck and Robert Preston from an Indian attack—as you will perceive when you see the film

The New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons

ENTERPRISE: Sam Behrman's new hit, 'No Time for Comedy," concerns a playwright who, at the urging of a siren, is tempted to forego his comedy writings and instead write a play about a plot she outlines . . . This plot is about a scientist who learns that his son had been killed while fighting in Spain, later believes that he has contacted his dead son and finds a new career in this spiritualistic discovery. The son returns, unrecognized because of a plastic operation, and commits suicide rather than disprove his father's new theory. But the playwright finally discards this plot and returns to writing comedy . . . Last week Warner Bros. offered to buy this father-son plot, which is discarded in the play, and to make it a film for Paul Muni.

FAME: At the ew York premiere of "Juarez" a number of celebrities were brought to a microphone in the lobby to speak about the picture. Two men scoured the lobby hunting the celebrities . . . One of these scouts heard a patron respond to a famous name, "Mr. Reinhardt," and hustled him, although he protested, to the microphone . . . "Now, please, please, one moment, please," he finally was able to explain. "I'm not Max Reinhardt. Honestly, I'm not" . . . He was Stanley Rinehart, son of Mary Roberts Rinehart and member of the publishing firm of Farrar & Rinehart.

ESCAPE: Dorothy Parker and Alan Campbell are at work completing their new play, hoping in this way to avoid the necessity of returning to Hollywood . . . They don't like working in the film colony, and when they arrived there the last time, Dorothy wired a New York friend: "Arrived safely in Hollywood. Please send saw & file in a loaf of bread."

CHARITY: A group of philanthropists headed by Gov. Lehman met the other day to contribute to a fund for the purpose of helping refugees throughout the world . . . The representative of the Guggenheim Foundation announced that it was the pleasure of his organization to contribute $250,000 . . . An elderly, gray-haired gentleman arose and addressed the Governor. "I understand," he began, humbly, "that we are not to be embarrassed or ashamed of our contributions, however small. I want to give $200" . . . The donor came to this country penniless only a few years ago. He teaches at Princeton now, at a modest salary. His name is Albert Einstein.

GREETING: On May 4 James Joyce's new book, "Finnegan's Wake," will be released simultaneously in America and England . . . The book originally was called "Work in Progress," but the author of "Ulysses" decided that "Finnegan's Wake" is a better title . . . New York's most distinguished Irishmen—including Frank Sullivan, Barry Fitzgerald, Ernest Boyd and Dudley Digges—will greet the publication of the new book at a celebration to be held at the Gotham Book Mart . . . The celebration will be in an unusual form. They'll greet it with an Irish wake.

ACCLAIM: Helen Keller, the blind and deaf woman who has become one of the world's greatest ladies, "saw" "No Time for Comedy." She was brought backstage, flung her arms around Katharine Cornell and said: "I loved your new book. It has the quality of "The Covered Wagon'—pioneering until you crossed the frontiers into the greatness of the theater" . . . She then met Laurence Olivier and asked: "Is he handsome?" . . . "Yes," Miss Cornell assured . . . Miss Keller clapped her hands gleefully . . . Margalo Gillmore then was introduced to her. Miss Keller first patted Margalo's hair and hands. "You're a nice siren," said Miss Keller—but your hands don't feel like a siren's . . . except for their charm."

PROGRESS: Solicitor-General Robert Jackson addressed the New York County Lawyers Association last night and then submitted to questioning . . . "Don't you think," Jackson was asked, "that the AAA decision means the beginning of the regimentation of our farmers—a regimentation which later will spread to other fields—that this is a blunder which will affect our generation and generations to come?" . . . "Each generation," replied Jackson, "has a right to make blunders of its own. This decision just means another lawsuit."

CRITICISM: A Canadian magazine was stopped by the Canadian censors from publishing a cartoon satirizing the visit of their Majesties . . . "But this is ridiculous," the editor protested to the censors. "Even in London's Hyde Park people are allowed to make speeches advocating the overthrow of the King" . . . "You may advocate overthrowing his Majesty," the censors informed, "but you may not ridicule him."

Gayety

"GIRLS FROM HOLLYWOOD." The Independent Burlesque Association presents the musical production in two acts and 24 scenes, featuring June St. Clair, supported by Billy Foster, Betty DuVal, Danny Jacobs, Diane Burton, Hilda Allison, Lester Mack, Juno, and Joe Young. Dance numbers devised by Beverly Carr; staged by James J. Lake. Reviewed Sunday matinee by Art John. B. C. A. A.

A very pretty and charming blonde by the name of June St. Clair is the star of this week's bill at Col. Lake's Gayety Theater. And, as usual, the supporting cast is composed of clever comedians and one of the best line of girls seen at this house this season.

This is Miss St. Clair's initial appearance at the Gayety. After seeing this gorgeous and shapely creature, we are inclined to think the Messrs. Ferber and Lake should have brought her here much earlier in the season. June scores in both her musical specialities. Wearing a lavish wardrobe, June proves an accomplished entertainer, both from the standpoint of her vocal offerings and the sensational dance she offers on her final appearance.

Another whose appearance adds much to the distaff portion of the bill is Betty DuVal, an Alabama lass with the face of an angel, a million dollar smile and a figure like Venus de Milo. This is the first time Betty has played Washington in several years and we are happy to report that her numbers are executed in the typical DuVal manner, which is all that we had hoped for.

Billy Foster and Joe Young afford the comedy relief, ably supported by Danny Jacobs and Lester Mack. Foster, in particular, has several comedy skits that hit a new high in laughs.

Completing the cast are Diane Burton, Miss Juno and Hilda Allison, the first named a dazzling brunette.

Good Neighbor Policy Adopted By Hollywood

Major Companies All Are Making Pictures On Latin America

By Melrose Gowler

Hollywood, April 30.

President Roosevelt's "Good Neighbor" policy between the United States and the Latin Americas has permeated the film industry to such an amazing extent that nearly every studio has a picture planned or in production commending the South and Central Americas, a survey discloses.

One studio, RKO-Radio, apparently heard Mr. Roosevelt's suggestion louder than the rest, for it is setting something of a record with four films with Latin-American backgrounds in production simultaneously.

The survey reveals that some of the biggest productions to be released shortly have South American backgrounds. There is Columbia's Howard Hawks' big-budget film, "Only Angels Have Wings," starring Cary Grant and Jean Arthur. It is an aviation story told against a background of a mythical South American city called Darranea.

Warner's Make "Juarez"

Warner's contribtuion to the good-neighbor policy is "Juarez," starring Paul Muni and Bette Davis. Filmed to a large extent in Mexico, this documentary film, it is reported, pleased the Mexican government so greatly they have requested Warners to hold the world premier in Mexico City.

M-G-M has prepared a gay story of romance under a tropic moon in the soon-to-be-produced "Lady of the Tropics," starring Hedy La Marr and Robert Taylor. Universal is awaiting the return from Paris of Danielle Darrieux to begin filming of "Rio." Principal Productions is going to star Bob Breen in "The Boy Who Cried Wolf," a story in which Mr. Breen solves certain trade relations difficulties between a South American (mythical) nation named Pelota and the United States.

Paramount has "The Magnificent Fraud," staring Akim Tamiroff, Lloyd Nolan, and which recounts an astonishing fable. It is the story of a native dictator who dies, and unbeknownst to the populace, is replaced by an actor. The story bears a striking resemblance to tales emanating in book form concerning a certain European dictatorship whose headman's initials are A. H.

RKO Plans Four

First of RKO-Radio's quartet of contributions to the good neighbor policy will be "The Girl From Mexico," starring Lupe Velez, Donald Woods and Leon Errol. It is a gay comedy of a cute little Mexican girl who is brought to New York, upsets the metropolis, and happily returns to Mexico. Second of the films is "Panama Lady," starring Lucille Ball and Allan Lane. It's the story of a disillusioned cabaret entertainer and a two-fisted young prospector who are thrown together in the Central American jungle—and find their happiness, aided by a bit of native philosophy, there.

Third of the pictures is "Five Came Back," featuring Chester Morris, Wendy Barrie, Lucille Ball, Kent Taylor, C. Aubrey Smith, John Carradine, Allen Jenkins and others. It's the story of the development of aviation routes between Mexico and the United States and recounts some of the pitfalls to which flying is still heir in this flight. Fourth, is "The Dove," starring Leo Carrillo and Steffi Duna. It's an adaptation of the famous stage play of the same name. Its locale is northern Mexico, near the United States border.

The recent pleasure trip of Tyrone Power (plus Annabella) to the Latin Americas awakened Hollywood to a realization of the enormous popularity of American film stars in the lands to the south.

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, April 30.—The song is ended but the melody lingers on for Katharine Hepburn and Howard Hughes. Although their big romance is, to all intents and purposes, as dead as yesterday's newspaper, their devotion as friends is just as strong as ever. Howard proved that when he bought the film rights to "The Philadelphia Story," Katy's current stage hit, obviously to protect her in case she wanted to star in the movies in the role she created before the footlights.

LOUELLA PARSONS

I doubt if Howard, himself, will make the picture for his millions and his chief interest are now in aviation and with national defense such a big issue he is more than ever devoting his energies to improved airplanes. But there is no law to keep him from selling the rights to the Philip Barry play should Katy elect to do it for any specific company, nor from sharing in the profits should he wish to make such an arrangement.

The Irish grey-green eyes and raven tresses of Vivien Leigh, so widely discussed when she was chosen to play Scarlett O'Hara, are entering into another controversy. This time it is "Rebecca" for which she is being more than merely mentioned. She will be tested this coming week at the request of Director Alfred Hitchcock. In discussing Miss Leigh for the timid, rather retiring wife, a character entirely opposite to Scarlett, Mr. Hitchcock told friends that, while he felt she probably wasn't 100 per cent right for the part, she is an excellent actress and as good as anyone else they have in mind. Young Mr. Selznick, whose word of course is final, probably feels if Miss Leigh is a huge success in "G. W. T. W." it will be a good idea to star her in his next important movie.

I don't think I've ever heard anyone laugh as hard as Madeleine Carroll when I told her I heard she was to increase the population. I wish I could print her answer but I can't. But I will tell you what she said about her clothes in "Free Woman," alias "Are Husbands Necessary?" She has 20 changes and tells me they are the most beautiful gowns she has ever seen. Sounds as if this is to be the clothes picture of the year. Madeleine has the same crew, the same cameraman and director that she and Fred McMurray had in "Cafe Society." She starts work in 10 days and here's hoping she won't spend all her salary to buy those costumes over which she is raving.

Chatter in Hollywood: Our glamour girls married to orchestra leaders are trying to guard their domestic happiness even more carefully since the Herbie Kay-Dorothy Lamour divorce. Roger Pryor, who has been separated from Ann Sothern so many times that divorce rumors became prevalent, is giving up engagements out of town and will remain in Hollywood. Mary Pickford, who is very happy with Buddy Rogers, accompanies him whenever possible. In fact, she has spent most of her married life going from city to city with him since she feels that her marriage is the most important thing in her life. Mary is doing a worthwhile deed in sponsoring the charity dance at the Shrine Auditorium tomorrow night.

A line or two: Jean Gabin, who knocked Hollywood cold in "Grand Illusion," must be suffering from some delusions of grandeur of his own. He's turned down every story offered him, though he said he was willing to come here . . . David Selznick didn't take up Paulette Goddard's option on her contract and it's reported that Paramount is dickering with Charlie Chaplin's girl friend . . . can't say I'm much impressed with Paramount's idea for previewing "Invitation To Happiness." There will be one showing for ladies only—and another for the men. As for me, I like my boy friend along when I see a movie . . . Paul Lukas and Daisy are heading for London with the unusual understanding that if war breaks out before Paul starts his picture his salary will be cancelled—but the company pays his passage both ways.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: The Rudy Vallee-Marjorie Weaver romance rumors are just that. The head man in her life is Lieut. Kenneth Schacht and she will wed him when he returns from duty in China; Everett Crosby's divorce was final April 25 and he will lead Florence George to the altar any day now; Phil Reed's heart beat for many months, the rich Lillian Emerson, reported to have reconciled with her husband; Mrs. Wallace Beery's cavalier at Reno said to be Marty Borden; Gene Towne has bought Betty a string of pearls just because she is his favorite wife; Alex D'Arcy, in Palm Springs over the week-end, will get his answer from Arleen Whelan any minute now; Hedy Lamarr's dressing room filled with flowers every day by her devoted bridegroom, Gene Markey. This reminds me that Phil Ohman and Foster Corling have sold "Each Time You Say Goodbye" to M.-G.-M. for the Lamarr movie; Mrs. Monte Brice, who was formerly Doris Hill, has presented him with another daughter.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

Yankees Get Four Hits as Nats Win, 3-2

The Washington Post Sports

 WASHINGTON: MONDAY, MAY 1, 1939

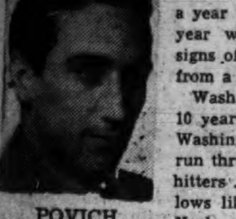
This Morning

With Shirley Povich

New York, April 30.—At this writing it seems that 35 home runs have been swatted in American League parks this season and it seems, furthermore, that not even as many as one of those home runs was hit by a Washington player. That is too bad.



POVICH

It is too bad, because for the lack of power hitting the Nats are operating with a terrific handicap in a year when they could be a nice ball team. In a year when the Washington pitching is showing signs of needing no apologies, the club is suffering from a hereditary ailment.

Washington teams never did feature power. For 10 years Goose Goslin was the only athlete in a Washington uniform who was any sort of a home-run threat. The Nats, traditionally, have been slap hitters . . . good hitters, but not power hitters. Fellows like Sam Rice and Joe Judge and Earl McNeely and Buddy Myer always made their quota of hits, but they were not explosive blows.

Last season might have been an exception. Very deliberately, Clark Griffith attempted to load up with power. He already had Al Simmons and he made a trade for Zeke Bonura. It was a good idea, but it didn't work out. Simmons and Bonura gave Washington more long hits than any other two players in the club's history. Both of them broke the record of 20 home runs by a Washington player in a single season. But yet they were little help.

Home Runs Offset by Slowness Afoot

They were little help because their 43 home runs were offset by their slowness afoot. They hit into too many double plays. Bucky Harris was a long-suffering fellow last summer. Nary an afternoon passed when the rheumatic Simmons and Bonura didn't drive into a heart-breaking double. Harris was sick of that sort of power. He readily okayed Griffith's release of the pair during the winter.

The fact that the Nats, in nine games this season, have not been party to any of the league's 35 home runs, and are yet maintaining a respectable position in the race, is something of a tribute to the club's pitching and the frequent if modest hitting. All down the line, the Nats are dangerous if not potent hitters.

Bucky Harris' only hope of finding long-range power on his club is embodied in the short, squat frame of Bobby Estalella. The compact little Cuban is the only gent on the team who takes a toehold in the batter's box, grips his bat on the end and turns it loose at a pitch. Terrific wrist action is Estalella's also, and when he connects solidly he rates among the league's heavier sluggers.

Taft Wright, for all his fancy batting average and his frequent extra-base blows, is not a home-run hitter. Like Cecil Travis, Wright gets his hits perhaps because he is too smart to overswing and is content to punch and slap at the ball. It all adds up to a nice batting average, and that sort of clouting also wins ball games, but it doesn't wreck 'em, like Greenberg and York and Foxx and DiMaggio wrecks 'em.

Improved Pitching Is No Myth

It is too bad, as we were saying, because there is evidence that this might be the year when the Nats could be something of a power in the league race. The Nats' improved pitching is no myth. Those two games Ken Chase and Joe Krakauskas chuked at the Yankees yesterday and today were tremendously impressive. And Dutch Leonard and his knuckle ball are a powerful combination in spacious parks like Griffith Stadium, where Leonard can let 'em hit and stand by while his outfield colleagues haul down those long flies.

The Nats, incidentally, may be doing the American League as a whole a vast service by their actions against the Yankees this season. Three victories over the Yankees in five games between the two clubs this year is not only a potent recommendation for the Nats. It may give some of the ohter clubs an idea. At least it may help to dissipate the idea that the Yanks are unbeatable.

Certainly Bucky Harris has more talent to work with this season than at any time since he rejoined the Nats in 1935. He has a likely looking crop of pitchers and much latitude in other departments. No club in the league is equipped with the infield reserves the Nats can boast. In Charley Gelbert and Ossie Bluege Harris has a pair who would be regulars on other clubs.

And it appears that Jimmy Wasdell will be around for some time. Harris is not keen about the little first baseman's hitting ability against left-handed pitching, but he is not exactly handicapped when Ossie Bluege is on the bag. Wasdell, incidentally, was within whispering distance of release a week ago. Then he broke up a game in Boston with a hit. And three singles and a double in four times at bat today saved his job, no kidding.

Detroit Gets 19 Hits, Beats Indians, 14-1

Bridges Wins Third Game Of Season

Dobson and Broaca Hurl for Cleveland; Gehringer Homers With Bases Loaded

By the Associated Press.

Detroit, April 30.—The Detroit Tigers thumped out 19 safeties today to wallop the Cleveland Indians, 14 to 1, and make them even in the first two engagements in their three-game series.

Tommy Bridges, Detroit's veteran right-hander, won his third consecutive pitching victory of the season. The defeat was charged to Joe Dobson, Cleveland recruit from New Orleans, who gave up 13 hits and nine runs in the first five innings.

Johnny Broaca finished for the Tribe. The first inning he worked the Tigers loaded the bases and Charley Gehringer swept them clean with his third home run of the year. Gehringer and Dixie Walker each made four hits in five tries.

Browns' Rally Fails And Chisox Win, 6-5

St. Louis, Mo., April 30 (INS).—The St. Louis Browns staged a three-run uprising in the ninth inning but the Chicago White Sox hung on for a 6 to 5 victory today.

It was the fourth straight victory for the Comiskeys and their sixth in the last seven starts.

They got all of their tallies in the first five innings. All but one were gained at the expense of Buck Newsom, who was routed in the third.

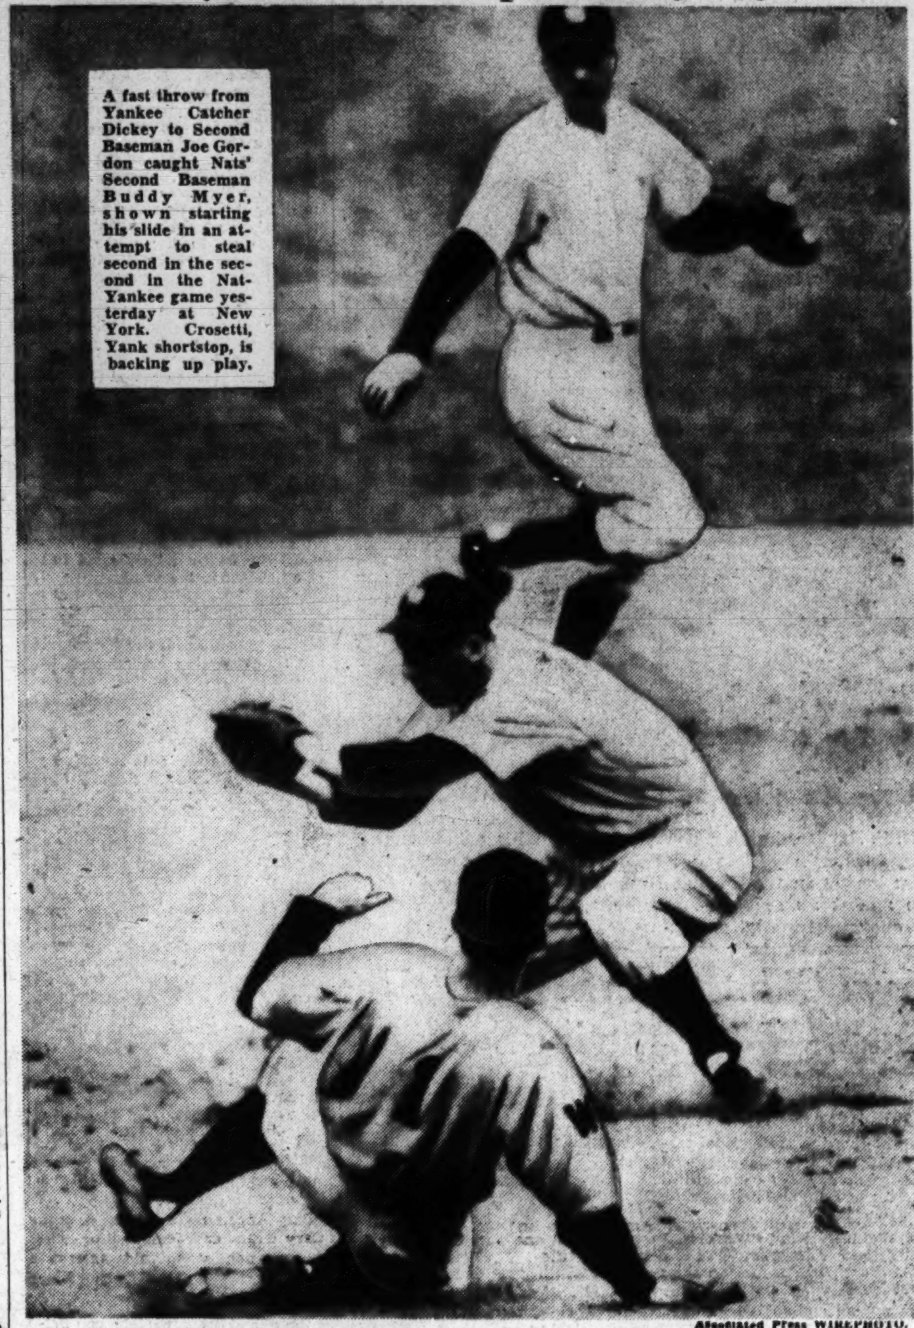
Dickey's Throw Traps Buddy Myer



A fast throw from Yankee Catcher Dickey to Second Baseman Joe Gordon caught Nats' Second Baseman Buddy Myer, shown starting his slide in an attempt to steal second in the second in the Nat-Yankee game yesterday at New York. Crosetti, Yank shortstop, is backing up play.

Caster Hurls Well For Phila but Mates Fail to Back Him Up

By the Associated Press.

Philadelphia, April 30.—The Boston Red Sox defeated the Philadelphia Athletics today, 3-1, behind Jim Bagby's seven-hit pitching. George Caster went seven innings for the A's and allowed five hits, but his mates failed to hit in the pinches.

Two of the Boston runs were homers, one by Bagby and the other by Doerr. The Red Sox first run was unearned, as Newsome threw wild to first on a ground ball, permitting Tabor to score from second.

The Philadelphians pushed across a run in the eighth after Bob Johnson doubled, went to third on an out and scored on Lodigiani's sacrifice fly.

Phillies Checked, Dodgers Win, 3-1

By the Associated Press.

Brooklyn, April 30.—Luke Hamlin's seven-hit pitching and some timely hitting by his teammates gave the Brooklyn Dodgers their second successive victory over the Philadelphia Phillies today, 3 to 1.

Hamlin was in trouble only once as the Phils scored in the sixth on Emmett Mueller's single, Herschel Martin's double and Chuck Klein's fly to deep right. It was the Dodger star's third victory of the season and lifted the club into fifth place in the National League.

Cricket II Wins Feature Sailing Race

Bush's Boat Scores 2-Length Victory in P. R. S. A. Series; Frolic Beats Comets

By Bob Knight.

After a morning of threatening weather and a slow drizzle, the weatherman appeared like knight in shining armor to clear the skies for 38 sailing enthusiasts who competed yesterday in the second race of the Potomac River Sailing Association's spring series.

Fluky winds, alternately from the northwest and northeast, blew across the Hains Point course, averaging in velocity from virtually zero to 15 miles per hour. At the start, the wind was abaft the beam, offering a fast start for contestants.

Cricket II, owned and skippered by H. C. Bush, of Alexandria, took advantage of a fast start to win the 20-foot restricted class, romping across the finish line two lengths in front of Myray, another Alexandria craft piloted by Ralph A. Youngs. Cricket II, Myray and Phil Ersher's for the start. Dr. Albert E. Pagan arrived nearly three minutes late in Kan Doo after a fast beat down the Washington channel. He finished in third place.

Edrington Also Late

The handful of spectators watching from Hains Point saw Judge Prentice E. Edrington, a pre-race favorite, arrive nearly 10 minutes after the starting gun. He later explained he had been rubbing down the sleek bottom of his trim Lady Avon and had lost track of the time. Clocked by the timers at 1:07:53, the sailing jurist may have offered plenty of competition for the Cricket and Myray had he been on time for the gun.

William White, sailing the Frolic, scudded home nearly a minute ahead of Leslie Wright in Fan Tan II to take the Comet Class. Wright, winner of last week's competition in the Comet Class, and Chesapeake Bay Snipe champion, lost considerable headway on the first lap and failed to make up the substantial lead taken by Frolic. Nandua, with Charles Dodge at the tiller, placed third in a field of nine.

High Lama Wins

In the Snipe class, Evart Warren's High Lama coasted home by a comfortable margin of nearly seven minutes over R. Dunn's Rebel. High Lama was winner of second division in the warm-up races held three weeks ago. George E. Wilcox in Hardtack followed Rebel to place third.

Galatea, one of the few Star boats in these waters, maintained a lead throughout the Class B handicap race to take top honors. She was piloted by her owner, Adrian Gilbert, who managed to keep her sails pulling in the second half of the last lap, despite a dying wind. Corrected time in the various handicaps set up on a basis of last week's performances put the Sea Scout catboat Bob Cat into second place. The broad-beamed Bob Cat broke out a spinnaker during the atfernoon when her position enabled her to run with the wind. Louis B. Gieser's Sandpiper, using a new Marconi rig, placed third on corrected time.

Arabacia, Charles Trammell's 14-foot internation dinghy, which crossed the finish line first in Class B handicap, had to surrender top honors on a basis of corrected time to Vincent J. Oliver, in Bubble. Ralph Barnhard, last week's winner in Class B, dropped back to fourth place, partially due to a heavy handicap.

Jezebel beat a field of seven starters in the Class C handicap division. The winner, piloted by her owner, W. E. Preston, was followed by Rob-

DiMaggio Will Be Lost About a Week

Injured Yank Star Ordered to Rest Leg 5 Days, at Least

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 30.—Joe DiMaggio, who injured his leg yesterday, rolled restlessly in his bed at a hotel today while his New York Yankee teammates lost their second straight game to the Washington Senators.

His right leg was encased in tape and bandages and the slugging outfielder said his physician ordered him to stay off it for at least five days. He added it probably would be twice that long before he could get around well enough to return to the line-up.

"I thought it was sure busted," declared DiMaggio. "I guess I was the happiest guy alive when the doc told me I had escaped a break."

Dr. Robert Emmet Walsh, club physician, said X-rays showed there was no fracture but that muscles extending from the ankle almost to the knee had been torn from the bone by the fall.

The mishap occurred during the third inning of yesterday's game as DiMaggio chased a triple hit by Bob Estalella.

Tigers Take Forfeit

The first game of the season for Southeast Tigers was won by a forfeit yesterday over Urciolo Realy Roman. The Tigers play Plaza A. C. next Sunday on Tech High diamond.

Quantico's Annual Horse Show Canceled

When rain yesterday interfered with the staging of the uantico Horse Show for the second afternoon in succession officials called off the annual event. Nine events had been held, however, and Rusty, a one-eyed entry of the United States Government, ridden by Capt. T. H. Tratnell, was declared champion after a toss of the coin with a stable mate, Clipped Wings, ridden by Col. A. W. Rosse.

Old-Timers Recall Growth Of Virginia Gold Cup Race

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Warrenton, Va., April 30.—With the enghteenth annual running of the Virginia Gold Cup race less than a week away—the event is scheduled for Saturday on the Broadview course—horsemen in this section turned an attentive ear to the recollections of old timers who saw the race when it was first staged and have watched it grow into one of the brightest spots on the spring racing calendar.

The first Gold Cup race was run over the estate of Capt. and Mrs. Sterling Larrabee in the spring of 1922, and Irish Laddie, owned by the late Katherine E. Hitt, of Middleburg, and ridden by Arthur White, was the winner over Bedminister Stables' Stilts and Mrs. Glascock's Pagebrook.

A repeat victory went to Mrs. Hitt the next year, in 1923, as her Oddity, ridden by White again, stumbled over the finish line in front. The first $1,500 Gold Cup was retired two years later in 1925 by Mrs. Hitt when John Bunny romped to a flashy finish.

It wasn't until 1935 that the race was brought to Broadview, and that year Indigo, owned by John M. Schiff, of New York, christened the new course laid out by William duPont, jr. with a victory. In the four years since Indigo's performance, the annual classic has been dominated by Ostend, Mrs. Frank Gould's prize steeplechaser, and all the New York sportswomen needs to retire the third Gold Cup is a victory this year. She is expected to have a strong entry on the line at the start. The only other owner with an active interest in the present cup is Carleton H. Palmer, of New York, whose Ghost Dancer won a leg on the trophy with a first place in 1936.

As in former years, this year's Gold Cup race will be the third event on a five-event program. The first will be the Farquier Plate, starting at 3 p. m., and that will be followed by the Virginia National Steeplechase. The Broadview follows the feature event, and the closing race will be the Warrenton Hunt Cup.

Champs Held Hitless Until 6th Inning

Alexandra Finishes Game After Krakky Succumbs to Pinch-Hitter; Appleton Fails

By Shirley Povich.
A Staff Correspondent.

New York, April 30.—Consider, if you please, this picture: The eighth inning at Yankee Stadium, the bases full of Yankees, Washington holding a 3-2 lead and the dangerous Joe Gordon at bat. Bucky Harris waves frantically to the bull pen for a relief pitcher and a tall, dark-visaged Venezuelean, in America on a visitors' passport, strides to the mound.

Now kindly get this also. Alex Alexandra can understand no English and out to the mound rushes little Rene Monteagudo, with instructions from Bucky Harris. In a babble of Spanish, Monteagudo talks, Alexandra listens, nods his head, waves Monteagudo off the field and starts to pitch.

23,712 See Game

Before 23,712 New York fans, the Nats won it because big Alexandra, pitching from a big league mound for the second time in his life, turned in a superb relief job in that eighth inning and again in the ninth.

Washington pitching held the Yankees to four hits today, thanks to a masterful job turned in by Joe Krakauskas and Alexandra, after Pete Appleton had all but pitched the ball game away in a sour eighth-inning relief performance.

Not a hit did the Yankees get off Krakauskas until the sixth inning when Red Rolfe bashed a single to left, but the need of a pinch-hitter with the Yankees leading, 1-0, forced Krakauskas from the game in the eighth. With a three-hit attack on Oral Hildebrand, the Nats reclaimed a 3-1 lead, thanks chiefly to Buddy Lewis' two-run single, and then Harris called upon Appleton to preserve the margin.

Unhappy Choice

It was an unhappy choice. One of the first things Appleton did was to walk Rolfe. Then he struck out Pinch-Hitter Tommy Henrich, but then he walked Bill Dickey. Lou Gehrig provided the second out, and then Appleton's control deserted him entirely. He walked Pinch-Hitter Charley Keller to fill the bases and then he walked Selkirk to force in a run.

Then Appleton himself walked. He walked off the mound at a signal from Harris, and out of the bull pen in right field, a tall angular figure came striding toward the mound. Harris was calling on the Venezuelan, who had served so nobly in a relief capacity against the same Yankees last week in Washington. With a confident step, Alexandra went into the box, took the ball and started to pitch.

But Harris held up play. He had a purpose. He wanted to tell Alexandra how to pitch to Joe Gordon, and he was doing it through interpreter Monteagudo. Then Alexandra turned to his pitching again.

Good Instructions

Harris' instructions must have been all right. Immobile of expression, Alexandra served a side-arm curve to Gordon for a called strike. Then he failed to cut the plate with a ball, and then Gordon fouled one into the leftfield stands. Then Gordon flied out on a tame loft to Sammy West in leftfield.

Into the ninth went Alexandra still holding his 3-2 lead. Pinch-hitter Charley Ruffing was no trouble. He grounded meekly to Buddy Lewis. Frankie Crosetti was no trouble either. Cecil Travis threw him out. Red Rolfe, the Yanks' last hope, was no trouble. He flied to George Case.

Alexandra had his victory. Harris rushed to embrace him before he could leave the diamond. A delegation of Cubans at the game leaped out of the boxes, actually kissed the big fellow.

In handing Hildebrand his second defeat of the season the Nats

Navy Stock Soars in College Rowing for 'Keepsie Race

Only Two More Regattas on Middie Program Before Event on Hudson, June 17

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 30.—Navy's stock soared considerably in the college rowing market today as the Midshipmen returned to Annapolis with their second straight triumph of the season stowed in their duffle bags.

Having proved the week before that they could master unfavorable conditions, the 1938 Poughkeepsie champions came to New York yesterday and, on the smooth waters of the Harlem, beat a highly-regarded Columbia varsity boat by a length and a half and won the junior varsity race by two lengths.

Timed in 7:41.8 for the main event and 7:43.1 for the jayvee over the mile and three-quarter course, the winners again turned in seemingly effortless performances while never raising their beat beyond 33. Columbia, on the other hand, was up to 41 in trying to catch the middle varsity in the closing stages.

Only two more regattas, before the four-mile climax on the Hudson June 17, remain on the Navy program. Next Saturday Cornell will come to Annapolis, and on May 20 the sailors will race Harvard, Pennsylvania and Columbia at Cambridge, Mass., for the Adams cup.

Cornell opened its campaign yesterday with a close decision over Syracuse on a one-mile course on the Lake Cayuga Inlet at Ithaca, N. Y. Forced to use the short course because of rough water on the lake itself, the big red put on a powerful closing sprint to win by eight feet in 4:57.9. Cornell's frosh and 150-pounders also won, while Syracuse took the junior varsity event.

Syracuse will go to Cambridge Saturday for the Compton cup regatta with Harvard, Princeton and M. I. T., while Columbia, Penn and Yale contest the Blackwell cup on the Housatonic at Derby, Conn. Penn's oarsmen won all four major races of a regatta on the Schuylkill yesterday, the varsity leading Rutgers over the finish line by four lengths while covering the Henley distance of a mile and five-sixteenths in 6:58.2.

Cubs and Chisox Play Benefit Game Today for Monty

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, April 30.—The White Sox and Cubs, Chicago's two major league teams, meet tomorrow in a benefit game for Monty Stratton, the Sox ace pitcher last summer, who lost a leg in a hunting accident during the off season.

The game, entire proceeds of which are to go to Stratton, was scheduled originally for April 17, but was rained out. The Sox will play their scheduled game with St. Louis at a later date. The Cubs were able to appear because of an open date.

Dizzy Dean, the Cubs' question mark hurler, will make his spring mound debut in Chicago as Gabby Hartnett's starting pitcher. Opposing him will be Edgar Smith, young southpaw recently acquired by the Sox from the Philadelphia Athletics.

Harry Grabiner, vice president of the White Sox, who has had charge of ticket sales, predicted 25,000 would attend the game.

Dick Skeen Wins Greenbrier Tennis

White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., April 30 (AP).—Dick Skeen, of Burbank, Calif., outclassed Herman Peterson, of New York, today to win the $2,000 Greenbrier open tennis championship in straight sets.

Skeen, who upset Defending Champion Bruce Barnes in the semi-finals, scored a 6-2, 6-1 victory.

The match was unexciting from the start and the outcome never was in doubt as the brilliant play of the Californian far outstripped the Fisher's Island player.

Peterson broke through Skeen's service only once, in the second set, when Skeen double faulted.

Barnes and Berkeley Bell, of Creskill, N. J., won the doubles championship yesterday by defeating Joe Whalen, of Memphis, and George Jennings, of Chicago, 6-4, 6-4, 4-6, 6-3.

Pimlico Opens Another Gala "Stake-A-Day" Meeting Today

$2,500 Test Objective of 10 Sprinters

Sun Egret Tackles Rough Time, Others; Preakness Climax of Brilliant Offerings

By Walter Haight.

The ghosts of the Preakness winners of the last century still run phantom races in the black of Baltimore nights but one would have to be more observing than a Fuller brush man to find a cobweb around the ancient plant of the Maryland Jockey Club this morning. As clean as a Dutch housewife's kitchen is the historic turf layout this morning for the afternoon will mark the beginning of two weeks of star-studded sport, the like of which has never been offered racing fans of this vicinity.

With the 49th running of the Preakness, on closing day, May 13, heading the list Pimlico's "stake-a-day" program will make every day seem like Saturday to the customers. With Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt as the No. 1 spark, Pimlico has awakened from a long sleep and needs only a good shake from the weatherman to have the most successful meeting since the country crashed off the stock standard.

Each day brings at least a $2,500 added event, with plenty of $1,500 races tossed into the line-ups. No purse will be less than $1,000. In addition, Pimlico will offer the first steeplechasing of the Maryland season.

Spring Handicap Today

The Baltimore Spring Handicap, first contested in 1935 and carrying $2,500 in added money, will be today's stellar offering. A dash of 6 furlongs, the race has drawn ten overnight entries which includes the fastest sprinters in these parts. The favorite will be found somewhere between the A. C. C. Stable's Sun Egret, winner of the Harford Handicap, and Yancey Christmas' Rough Time, brilliant stake winner at Bowie. This pair will march postward with identical assignments of 122 pounds.

Both are at the top of their form and should the track remain off, each will be at home. Jockey Al Shelhamer will be aboard Sun Egret, while Freddy Faust, Washington boy, will pilot Rough Time, the Marlboro-owned speed merchant.

Among the good horses who will get weight from the top two are Mrs. Louise Viau's Conquer, due to make his 6-year-old debut in this test; Mrs. Anthony Pelleteri's Old Rosebush, speedy son of Infinite; J. W. Y. Martin's Battle Jack, who had hard luck in his previous start; Donald Christmas' Accolade, reported fit and ready; Preeminent, Hal Price Headley's ace sprinter; Mrs. H. R. Heighe's Rehearsal, Graw winner; Winston Guest's mud-running Drudgery, and Mrs. Nat Ray's much-improved Rissa.

Limit Fields Named

Limit fields have been named for both ends of the daily double which will be conducted on the first and second races. A promising steeplechase, with seven entries listed, occupies the third position on the card. With the exception of Preakness Day, when the jumpers will battle it out in the first race, the timber-toppers will contest in the third race each day.

Three distance races, preferred by most fans, will be run on the flat. Post time for the first race is 2:15 p. m.

If you believe that Pimlico might be putting on the "dog" because of the opening day, glance at this line-up of stakes:

Tomorrow—The Rennert Handicap, $2,500 added for 3-year-olds at 6 furlongs.

Wednesday—The Gittings Handicap, $2,500 added for 3-year-olds and up at 1 1-16 miles.

Thursday—The Masquerader, $2,500 added, for 2-year-olds at 4½ furlongs.

Friday—The Green Spring Valley Steeplechase Handicap, $2,500 added for 4-year-olds and up at 2 miles.

And the stake parade goes right through next week.

Tuesday—The Suvivor, $2,500 added, for 3-year-olds at 1 1-16 miles.

Wednesday—The Dixie Handicap, $20,000 added, for 3-year-olds and up at 1 3-16 miles.

Thursday—The Carroll Handicap, $2,500 added, for fillies and mares, 3-year-olds and up at 6 furlongs.

Friday—The Pimlico Nursery, $5,000 added, for 2-year-olds at 5 furlongs.

Saturday—The Preakness, $50,000 added, for 3-year-olds at 1 3-16 miles.

Dawn Comes Over a Hurdle With Randle Up

This perfect jump being taken by U. S. Randle, Fairfax horse fancier, on his own mount, Randle Dawn, was only one of many turned in yesterday by Randle as his Bannockburn Farm walked away with most of the honors in the Fairfax Hunt horse show. Due to the unfavorable weather, entries were almost as scarce as spectators, and there were few enough of the latter

Porter's Mite And Challedon In Fast Drills

Maryland Horse Works Five-Eighths Mile in 1:00 Handily

By the Associated Press.

Louisville, Ky., April 30.—Challedon and Porter's Mite, latest of the top-ranking Kentucky Derby eligibles to join the Churchill Downs colony, stepped through brisk workouts today. Both were shipped from Maryland Friday for next Saturday's classic.

Challedon, W. L. Brann's Maryland hope, went five-eighths of a mile in 1:00 handily. Porter's Mite, a Western horse owned by W. E. Boeing, traveled the same distance in :59 3-5. Challeden staged his workout around turns, however, while Porter's Mite started from a chute and sped along a straightaway.

Working alone, Challedon turned the quarter in :23 3-5, three-eighths in :35 and half in :47 4-5.

Porter's Mite was accompanied by Air Chute in stepping the quarter in :23 1-5, three-eighths in :35 and half in :47. Air Chute finished four lengths behind him.

Another Western Derby hopeful, Xalapa Clown, owned by Mrs. B. Franzheim, of Houston, Tex., turned in a sparkling 1:55 2-5 for one and one-eighth miles in another workout. The quarters were clocked at :24 3-5, :49 1-5, 1:15 3-5 and 1:41 4-5. Gay Troubadour accompanied the Clown for the first three-eighths. The Derby candidate then was joined by Top Mann for the rest of the way.

Steel Heels, sole remaining Louisville hope owned by Junius Bell, turned a mile in 1:41 2-5. The quarters were :24 2-5, :49 and 1:14 4-5.

Baer Launches Serious Training

Monticello, N. Y., April 30. (INS).—Max Baer today commenced serious training for his bout with Lou Nova June 1, taking on three sparring partners for his first ring work at Gorssinger's Country Club. He also punched the bag and performed calisthenics for 300 spectators at the indoor ring.

Royal Giants Beaten, 10-6, By Norfolk

Inaugurating the professional season in the Negro International League yesterday before a crowd of 3,000 at Griffith Stadium, the Washington Royal Giants were defeated by the Norfolk Black Tars, 10-6, in the first game of a proposed double-header. The Giants were leading, 2-1, in the third inning of the second game, when a downpour of rain put an end to the pastime.

Both teams presented an array of talent gathered from colored professional ranks, and gave a creditable performance on a field which was slow and slippery. Scott gave a clever exhibition of pitching to defeat the Giants, while the Tars knocked Walker and Hall from the box early in the proceedings, but were held safe by Snowden, who came in for relief.

While errors were numerous because of the condition of the playing field, the play was replete with thrills from spectacular catches in the outfield, and in particular, the double play started by Sampson, the Tars' second-sacker.

When Johnson, the Giant left gardener, sent a scorching liner just to the right of the second sack, Sampson raced over, dived for the ball, snaring it in his outstretched hand before it touched the sod. He turned a complete somersault, but held onto the pill, and threw out Carter, who was scrambling through the mire back to first base.

U. S. Randle's String Scores At Horse Show

Weatherman Holds Fairfax Entries and Crowd to Minimum

It was a field day for U. S. Randle's string of horses at the Fairfax Hunt horse show yesterday, for bad weather and the postponement of the show from Saturday kept most of those who intended to exhibit home from the event.

Nine horses appeared when the first class was called, five of them from Randle's Bannockburn Farm, near Fairfax. From that time on it was strictly a Randle day, with his good brown gelding, Sport Marvel, finally crowned both hunter and open jumping champion.

Sport Marvel, piloted by Margaret Cotter, appeared in six classes and won three bllue ribbons and three seconds. The light entries, however, did not keep the handful of spectators who brave the mud and cold weather from enjoying the touch-and-out class, when Sport Marvel staged three jump-offs with John Royston's chestnut, Oh Alby, ridden by Hunton Atwill. The course of four fences was treacherous enough with the bad footing, but the jumps went up to 4½ feet before Sport Marvel had a perfect round and defeated the Royston entry.

Another Randle stable member, Randle's Find, had several good performances that netted him blue ribbons in the classes for green hunters and hunter hacks. Randle's Princess, a flashy chestnut mare with four white stockings, took care of the major award in the class for model hunters, judged solely in conformation.

Due to the lack of entries and cash customers, the committee decided to call it a day early in the proceedings, which left the weather man as the show's biggest winner.

—At The Post

Pimlico, Md., April 30.

Dear Al:

It's probably a good thing that I don't own a 3-year-old. If my entry money held out I would have him running last in all the country's best races. I'd send him to the Kentucky Derby, the Preakness, the Belmont and the whatnot. All he would have to show me would be four legs and a chin that didn't sag. But most horse owners are not like that. There have been cases where horses ran in the Derby, Preakness or the Belmont just so the owner could see his colors in action. It is a rather expensive luxury, however. Most Derby or big stake eligibles have to show their trainers and owners the makings before they get their right to go to the post in the country's elite. John A. Manfuso, Washington manufacturer and sportsman, has withdrawn his colt, Affair. The son of Osculator galloped to his maiden victory at Havre de Grace last week but, after a conference with Trainer Dion Kerr, it was decided that Affair was not Derby caliber, at this time at any rate. Manfuso and Kerr teamed very well in guiding the career of Aneroid and it is dollars to doughnuts if they say Affair doesn't belong in the Derby—well, that's that. However, as I said before, if he were my horse, I'd buy a second-hand trailer, turn up my coat collar and puff on toward the Derby with a head full of a 1,000,000 to 1—even as you and you and you. But I guess that's why we don't own good horses. Well, it's on to Pimlico tomorrow for the last stop on the Maryland circuit before the long session at Charles Town. Believe, me, folks, if I had a hat it would be off to Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt. When he moved into the big office over here in Baltimore, he said he was going to give the fans something to open their eyes. He really has a lineup that is staggering. But in passing, I must give a little credit to Haver de Grace. That meeting up there was a pip. Plenty of good horses and lots of formful racing. In fact, when I averaged over two winners a day it must have been formful. Did you get your turkey money on Thanksgiving? Pimlico has a new camera. The lens operates without shutter with a narrow strip focused on the finish line. As the horses cross the line, the camera takes a continuous picture. At the finish of the race, every horse is on the negative in the position he was at the wire. In addition, Vanderbilt has imported Joe Hernandez, veteran race announcer, from California. His "There they go!" should give the fans a big kick. Pimlico deserves your support. Now for some winners. BILL.

First race—Annie Alone was third in both of her starts in Florida with the best juveniles down there. She is well placed in this event, comes from a good stable and should win. Dark Rapture raced well in making his first start at Havre, and may be the one to beat. Sealoch can better poor recent races.

Second race—Great Haste was beaten two heads on the wire last outing, has good Florida form and is dropping down to meet cheaper competition today. Appears much the best. Cleaning Time was a trifle short in his last race at Bowie and should give a better account of himself here. Coursing also drops down.

Third race—Saluda has been away from the races for several years, but is in the hands of Thomas Hitchcock, who has a way of sending out fit horses. May be the one. Farndale won his last race last year, but has changed hands. Barrystar was highly regarded at the United Hunts meet last fall and must be considered.

Fourth race—White Cockade figures best of these better grade platers on the merits. A second to Rissa at Bowie and a fair effort behind Pagliacci in his last race. Zostera has failed to register in recent races, but has shown speed and should place. Maecloud is lightly weighted and moves up on a slow track.

Fifth race—Sun Lover raced within a few lengths of Gilded Knight in the Chesapeake Stakes. He was a good colt at Santa Anita last winter and apparently is back in form. Orcades won at the expense of older horses at Havre and chief competition figures to come from this quarter. Shambles for third.

Sixth race—Rough Time whipped a select field of sprinters in the Rowe Memorial in fast time at Bowie. The Christmas star is in top form and figures slightly best. Sun Egret will be the one to beat off his victory over Fighting Fox and other handicap stars in the Harford Handicap. Battle Jack needed his last race and should show improved effort.

Seventh race—Gyral finished strongly behind Count Tetrarch and Balapin in his last race at Havre and will prefer the longer route in this event. Scarlet O is also a slow beginner and his Havre races will have him on edge to supply stiff contention here. Super John figures best of the others.

Eighth race—The Queen is back with her own kind after a poor effort behind Invermark. She whipped a similar field at Bowie and should repeat that performance here. Gorse turned up a good thing at Havre and raced Dissembler to a nose in the mud. He gets a good figure off that race. Careful Miss is not outclassed and is due for one of her good races.

Best bet—Sun Lover.

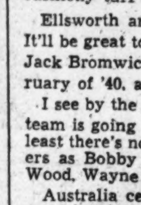
—With CONSIDINE

(Bob Considine is on a brief vacation. While he is gone his column will be written by prominent sports figures.)

By J. Donald Budge.
World Professional Tennis Champion.

New York, April 30.—My first season as a professional tennis player has now passed into the limbo of something or other, and I'm practically on the eve of sailing for Europe.



BUDGE

To allow one's self the luxury of a mental recap seems to be in order. Yes, the junket was a success. With Ellsworth Vines, our tour embraced 39 cities and with Fred Perry I appeared in 36 "stands." This is cutting eye-teeth the hard way.

However, I enjoyed it immensely. Financially it was very successful, and we had a lot of fun. Naturally, the indoor game was a new departure at first and the lights had me baffled. In my debut with Vines, at Madison Square Garden, I was woefully weak on overhead smashes and it was some time before I became accustomed to the new gimmick.

I've been asked if there is any radical difference between the galleries that attend the amateur tournaments and those that witness the professional matches. In my opinion there is absolutely no difference. However, during my first few matches there was one thing that was a bit disconcerting, but after a while I forgot about it. I allude to the vendors of soft drinks, etc., who ply their wares throughout a professional match. Of course at an amateur match a candy butcher in the stands is absolutely taboo.

Vines and I are sailing on the Queen Mary on May 10 for a world tour that will include England, Ireland, Scotland, France, Egypt, South Africa, India, China, the Philippines, Australia, Japan and Honolulu. We'll be joined in England by Bill Tilden and Hans Nusslein and then the big trek begins.

Incidentally, Tilden has suggested to the British Lawn Tennis Association that a professional tourney at Wimbledon would not be amiss. The British Association, so I understand, has taken kindly to the idea. But I doubt if anything can or will be done about it for another year or so. I hope that it does come to pass, because I'd like to feel again the cushiony turf of those wonderful courts under my feet.

Ellsworth and I are looking forward to this trip with great avidity. It'll be great to see our old pals and friendly foemen again: Von Cramm, Jack Bromwich, et al. We expect to return to the United States in February of '40, and after that—quien sabe?

I see by the papers that because I turned pro the American Davis Cup team is going to lose the cup. Well, I wouldn't be too sure of that. At least there's no reason for a team to give up hope when it has such players as Bobby Riggs, Gene Mako, Bitsy Grant, Elwood Cooke, Sidney Wood, Wayne Sabin and a few others like them.

Australia certainly is the team to beat. They'll be strong again this year, but it must be remembered that Riggs didn't have any particular trouble beating Adrian Quist, one of their singles stand-bys, last year at Philadelphia. I look forward to his doing it again this year. I consider Bobby a good bet against Jack Bromwich, too. Bromwich beat him in the United States-Australian matches last year, but it was the fifth contest of the tie, and we had already won the three matches we needed to hold the cup. So you can almost toss that one out. I'd like to be there when those two meet again—with the chips down.

As I see it, our great problem is to develop a winning doubles team. That's not easy. Every now and then we come up with a good combination in this country. But it takes time for two men to blend their games into a unit of power and speed, and I can't see a good team on the horizon just at this time.

Whichever doubles team represents us this year will have to be a brand-new combination. So for the sake of the team I'd like to see Gene Mako selected as one of the men on the team. He is a grand doubles player. He knows more about the technique and science and mystery of doubles than any player I've ever seen. And he stands up under pressure.

But I'll be a long way from Philadelphia when our country's team defends the cup. I'll be in China at that time, perhaps playing Bill Tilden. I'm looking forward to that. I guess you could say that Tilden got me into tennis, though of course he wasn't aware of it. You know how a kid reads about the exploits of some sports-page hero, and wants to emulate him. That's how it was with me. It will seem almost unreal to be swapping shots with him.

Sandlot Gossip

By Bill Burnett

From the volume of advance pieces, box scores and leads which already have poured over The Post's sports desk, the recent lament of one sandlot sponsor seems slightly at odds with the facts. Says Davis (Pop) Volper:

"We've got to do something about the hardball situation here. It's in a bad way, what with other sports drawing most of the interest. If something isn't done soon, softball will eventually kill out the backyard variety of hardball, and then where'll we be?"

We wouldn't attempt to guess where Mr. Volper will be when softball kills out its mother game, but offhand it will probably be under several feet of earth. That is, if the awful calamity ever occurs. The main point is that the sandlots are definitely on the upswing, and, despite Mr. Volper's direful prophesy, there seems to be room for both hard and soft ball on Washington's busy grassless diamonds.

Busy Organizing

Maybe the reason for Volper's dark prospect lies in the fact that he's busy at present organizing the lads of Turkey Thicket, out in Northeast, into a league. From the angle of one who never tried to organize a league, the job appears to be one of the toughest in sports, and hopelessness seems the natural result.

With all his pessimism, however, Volper is turning in a good job as head man of the Turkey Thicket Recreation Field. His new baseball organization will be called the Centennial Crescent League, and already eight teams have signed to participate in the first round starting next Sunday. They are: Michigan Park, Fort Bayard, Shankman's Brookland Orioles, Woodridge, Naiman Photo, Ida's Store and Fogelman, and the officers who will serve for the league's first year are Earl Blodheim, president; Charley Heller, treasurer; Floyd Rapp, secretary, and "Pop" Davis, business manager.

On the other side of the ledger, in the flourishing softball division, another brand-new league goes into action today when seven clubs start slugging on the Monument Grounds. It's the Columbian Softball League, sponsored by the District Baptist Convention and composed of representatives of seven Baptist churches in the District.

Increased Enthusiasm

According to its president, Johnny Firmin, the fledgling society has noted the increased enthusiasm of youngsters for softball and with the approval of Dr. Rufus Weaver, Baptist official, hopes to eventually include most of the Baptist Sunday Schools in Washington. Signed up to date are Bethany, Calvary, Grace, Metropolitan No. 1, Metropolitan No. 2, Petworth and West Washington.

The opening of Industrial's power-ridden loop, which was set for Saturday and moved up to today because of the dripping skies, is almost certain of attracting as much interest as Departmental's spectacular start a week ago Saturday. Five teams—Heurich Brewers, 7-Up, Old Milwaukee, Russell Motors and O'Donnell's Grill—are ready to start firing. The stands which were used for Departmental's opener are still in place on the Ellipse, furnishing accommodation for those who like their baseball from a sitting position.

In the first clash it will be the Brewers against O'Donnell's, and starting pitchers will be either Walter James or Archie Schrivener for Heurich and either Mac McDaniels or Johnny DeBettencourt for the Grillmen. "Fee" Collier, one of Washington's favorite players, will do the backstopping for Heurich and Pat Murphy for O'Donnell's.

Horses to Watch

Tuleyries Lin—This one will be turned loose with a bang this week. Had plenty of excuses in his last.

Carnage—Gets on the list again. Ready to whip his kind when the stable shifts to a topflight rider.

Lerno—The barn has been drilling this one regularly. He gets a chance this week and should make the grade.

Roman Boy—A son of Ha Ha who will have the last laugh on some good sprint rivals in the near future.

See See—A juvenile with more than ordinary speed who will visit the winner's circle in a jiffy.

If you've never brought a big fighting tarpon to gaff, your angling thrill supreme still awaits you. Imagine trying to handle a 50 to 200 lb. sinewy, twisting, leaping fish on an 18 thread line for an hour or so—that's sport!

Useppa Inn, Useppa Island, Florida, between Boca Grande and Captiva Passes, most famous (and rightfully so) of all tarpon runs, is open to June. Pullman service to South Boca Grande or plane service via Tampa. Comfortable, club-like accommodations for the more discriminating sportsman. Also golf, bathing, tennis adjoining the Inn.

For boat, guide, reservations, write or wire Mr. Floyd Alford, Manager, Useppa Inn, Useppa Island, Florida, or New York Office, 745 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Spencer's 68 at Anacostia Features Exhibition Match

209 Golfers Paired At East Potomac

Mrs. Hersum, Maj. Dunning Win Mixed Event at Army and Navy; Harvey, Walson Win at Kenwood; Lou Harrison Victor

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

Cliff Spencer, Beaver Dam professional, continued his par-breaking spree yesterday, playing Anacostia's revised layout in 68 strokes, one under par, and pairing with Bob Barnett, Chevy Chase mentor, to defeat Mel Shorey and Tommy Doerer of East Potomac, 4 and 3.

Spencer, who smashed the course record by three strokes with a 67 at Mount Pleasant last Monday, scored an eagle deuce on the tenth hole, dropping a niblick shot in the cup, and played good golf all the way before some 250 fans in the informal exhibition on the newly opened municipal layout.

Barnett treated the spectators to a fine putting show, holing three of more than 20 feet, and was two shots over par with a 71. Shorey had 72 and Doerer 76.

ARMY AND NAVY

Playing her first full round of the year and competing in her first competitive event, Mrs. C. R. Hersum paired with Maj. C. W. Dunning to win the mixed Scotch foursome event yesterday at Army and Navy with a 95, 22—73.

Two teams tied for second, Commander and Mrs. W. E. Sullivan with 94, 18—76, and Jerry Weible and Col. C. P. Barton, 92, 16—76.

Commander W. S. Popham scored a major upset in the spring match play tournament at the Service Club by trouncing Club Champion Ralph Bogart, 5 and 3, aided by a 2-stroke handicap allowance. Commander Popham was only three strokes over par for the round.

Allan and Danny Burton have scheduled a tough match for next Sunday, against George Diffenbaugh, Kenwood mentor, and Rut Coffey, Winchester C. C. professional, at Army and Navy, starting at 2 p. m.

KENWOOD

The rain proved no obstacle at Kenwood as a usual Sunday crowd competed in a 3-4-5-6 tournament and mixed Scotch foursome.

J. W. Harvey had the most threes, 4, with H. H. Hughes second, with 3. Charles Walson had 8 fours and C. A. Marlow, 6; while the fives ended in a tie, between J. W. Harvey and J. E. Voll, each with 12. R. H. Bailey, jr., and W. Hayghe also tied the most sixes, scoring 9 apiece.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles L. Vaile won low gross in the mixed Scotch foursome with a 92, while first prize in the Blind Bogey went to Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Lupton, 100—21—79, with Mr. and Mrs. Roy C. Miller second, with 103—30—73. Low putts went to Mrs. V. E. Myers and A. D. Kane, who staged a great chipping and putting exhibition on the front nine requiring only 13 putts, and won the 18-hole play with 33.

BEAVER DAM

A. A. Hopiak had 83 for the first lucky number in Class A to pace 16 Beaver Dam prize winners in a modified blind bogey tournament at the Landover Club. Other first-flight winners were Eddie Bean and John R. Miller, 75s, and G. M. Sheridan, 82.

Second-flight winners were C. R. Hall, 90; E. R. Strong, 94; W. C. Hackman, 90, and E. R. Kaufman, 93. Third-flight winners included C. E. Purdy, 97; R. E. Heimer, 95; J. P. Strong, 96, and M. H. Dunn, 98, while in the fourth flight S .A. Markowitz, 100; George Lavender, 108; Charles Jorg, 115, and C. B. Hartman, 105, were among the prize winners.

INDIAN SPRING

Lou Harrison won the selective holes tournament at Indian Spring by playing six holes in two strokes over par. The holes were 3, 5, 9, 12, 16 and 17, and Harrison had 26 against a par of 24. Jim Huntt was second with 27. High prizes went to R. G. Shinn, 40, and J .S. Feeney, 37.

CONGRESSIONAL

Two tied with net 77s in the Blind Bogey at Congressional, B. T. Cooper, 101-24, 77, and C. A. McLean, 94-17, 77.

CAPITAL

Tony Sylvester introduced the Capital Club members to a bingo-bango-bungo tournament yesterday at Capital, where first on the green, closest to the hole and other means of scoring were awarded points.

Billy Houghton, club champion, was the winner with 21 points, followed by John Phelan with 19 and a two-way tie for third by W. E. Rogers, jr., and E. J. Crill with 18.

B. W. Benton and R. N. Weisberg tied for first in the blind-bogey event, Benton scoring 93-17, 76, and Weisberg 96-20, 76. S. D. Martin had low gross with a 78 and also figured in the blind bogey with 78-5, 73, in a four-way tie with Ken Spencer, 83-100, 73; Cap Lawson, 87-14, 73, and L. L. Stowe, 83-10, 73.

WOODMONT

After 58 members partook of the Dutch breakfast, first event of Woodmont's "opening day" of the tournament schedule, the rain washed out the medal play handicap tourney in the morning and mixed scotch foursome in the afternoon. Golf Committee Chairman Leopold V. Freudberg announced the entire program would be carried over to next Sunday.

COLUMBIA

Columbia's opening day, has been rescheduled for next Sunday, with the four-ball event, driving, approaching and putting contests on tap.

MANOR

Mrs. Esther Simcoe, chairman of the women's golf committee at Manor, announced that women golfers playing in the first team matches tomorrow over the Norbeck course may bring their own caddies.

EAST POTOMAC

Tommy Doerer, manager of the East Potomac course, paired 209 golfers in 14 flights of the East Potomac spring tournament yesterday with the first round of match play starting today and continuing through next Sunday. A week will be given for each match.

Joe Micker won medalist honors with a 36-37, 73, over a 75 by defending champion, Gus Rittenhouse, while scores of 78 or better made the championship flight. Calvin Loving and Paul Paschke were drawn into the second flight with 78s.

Connecticut Pointer Wins Best in Show

National Capital Kennel Club Show Witnessed by 2,000

By Al Hailey

With all the composure of a budding debutante, a sleek, 3-year-old pointer captured best-in-show yesterday at the National Capital Kennel Club's tenth annual dog show at Meadowbrook Saddle Club.

The winner, Drumgannon Dreadnought, owned by the Rolew Kennels and handled by Mrs. Percy Hoopes, of Ridgefield, Conn., was pitted against the Nation's royalty of dogdom under the flag-draped tents of the Foley Dog Show Organization.

Only a handful of grim-faced dog owners of the 2,000 who turned out during the day remained to see the climax of the show—the review of the variety group winners before the judge, Mrs. L. W. Bonney, of Oyster Bay, L. I., the first woman ever to judge the event in the history of the Kennel Club's shows.

Despite torrential rains which turned the show grounds into a sea of mud and heavy winds which threatened to lift the tents from their stakes at any minute, more than 700 dogs were entered in the show—the largest ever held in the South.

The final line-up found the winners of the six variety groups—bluebloods all—proudly preening themselves before the critical eyes of the judges and gallery. Each dog sensed the gravity of the situation and fairly exuded dignity.

The half dozen passing in review for the best-in-show and highest honors included the beagle, Ch.

Failure to Bunch Hits Beats Cards

Redbirds Collect 10 Safeties Off Cubs' Rookie Lillard, but Lose Game, 4-1; Bees Halt Giant Rally to Triumph, 3-2; Fette Is Winner

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, April 30.—The St. Louis Cardinals made an imposing total of ten hits off Gene Lillard today, but they didn't bunch them enough to prevent the Chicago Cubs' rookie pitcher from winning his second major league start, 4 to 1.

The Cubs, however, making only six hits off Curt Davis and Bill McGee, combined their blows with three Cardinal errors to give the National League champions an even break in the two-game series.

The Cardinals didn't count more than one hit in any except the first and ninth innings. They had men on bases in every inning except the fourth, but Lillard always had a way of pitching himself out of difficulties.

The game was played before 19,630 fans who braved a cool afternoon to see the Cubs win their first game in four starts.

The Cardinals made a bid for a run in the first inning with two out. Enos Slaughter singled to right and Joe Medwick followed with a double to the same territory. Johnny Mize was purposely passed to fill the bases, but Terry Moore popped to Stanley Hack.

The Cubs scored first in the third. Gus Mancuso singled to right, moved to second on a wild pitch and took third when Dick Bartell grounded out. Mancuso then scored on Hack's long fly to Moore.

The Cubs got two more runs in the fourth. Augie Galan led off with a single to center when Carl Reynolds forced Leiber, but Phil Cavarretta carried on with a single to right. Reynolds scored and Cavarretto was safe at second when Lynn Myers dropped Davis' throw after Mancuso grounded to the box.

The Cubs got their fourth run in the fifth after Myers fumbled Herman's grounder. Galan forced Herman at second, but Leiber and Reynolds singled and Galan crossed the plate on the latter hit.

The Cardinals finally scored in the ninth when Herman Franks, batting for Mickey Owen, drew a pass and scored on Elvin Adams' grounder to Cavarretta and Jimmy Brown's single to left.

Giant Rally Fails, Boston Bees Win

By the Associated Press.

Boston, April 30.—Lou Fette, veteran righthander, held the New York Giants under control until he had two out in the ninth today while chalking up his third victory of the season for the Boston Bees by a 3-2 margin. The triumph, witnessed by a crowd of 23,428, enabled the Bees to close in on the idling Cincinnati pace-setters.

After holding his opponents to one run in his last 26 innings, Fette passed Mel Ott with two out in the ninth. Joe Demaree followed with a Texas leaguer to center and Bill Jurges drove in both of the Giants' runs for a booming triple to right. Bob Seeds was sent in to bat for Cliff Melton and he ended the game by flying out as the tying run rested on third base.

The Bees were held to five hits, all off Starter Manuel Salvo. Debs Garms, who got three of them, countered the first Boston run in the fourth inning. The Bees clinched the game in the fifth by pushing over two more tallies on singles by Al Lopez, Garms and Johnny Cooney and Lou Chiozza's high throw while trying to nail Tony Cuccinello at first base.

Cooke, Riggs Win Final at Hot Springs

By the Associated Press.

Hot Springs, Va., April 30.—Bobby Riggs, No. 1 U. S. amateur of Chicago, teamed with Elwood Cooke, Portland, Oreg., to defeat Wayne Sabin, also of Portland, and John Doeg, Rumson, N. J., in the Hot Springs invitational tennis turnament doubles finals today, 6—0, 6—2, 6—2.

Witnessing the match, which lasted over two hours, was Walter L. Pate, captain of the American Davis Cup team, who said he was here scouting for a doubles combination to play in the cup matches at Merion this summer.

Last year's doubles winner of Don Budge and Gene Mako was split when Budge turned pro. Pate said that he was seeking a combination that had played together for several years but at the same time had not given up hope of discovering some one who would blend with Mako's style of play and benefit by his experience.

Singles finals in the women's division of the Hot Springs tourney were also played today with Mrs. Sarah Palfrey Fabyan, Beverley Hills, Mass. Wightman Cup star, defeating Miss Florence Leboutillier, Old Westbury, Long Island, 6—2, 6—3.

Baering Down

By Arthur "Bugs" Baer.

We shouldn't get into foreign entanglements any more than a peg-legged fellow should go bear hunting in a swamp.

He'll bog down to the hubs and if the bear ever chases him he will start punching button holes in the mud instead of getting away.

However, national defense is something else again. But until you find a mouse in the sugar bowl you really haven't been invaded.

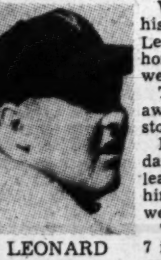
Man of the Month

(Following each game by The Washington Club, Walter Johnson distributes among the Nats ten points of merit, based on their performances for the day. At the end of each month, the Washington player boasting the greatest number of points is designated as the Nats' "Man of the Month" and receives a trophy from The Washington Post.)

By Walter Johnson,
(WJSV-General Mills Broadcaster.)

Introducing the Nats' Man of The Month, for April, 1939:

He is big, baldish Dutch Leonard, proprietor of the knuckle-ball pitch, who emerged yesterday as the Nats' most valuable player of the month in The Washington Post-General Mills-Station WJSV contest.



LEONARD

With 10 points to his credit, points voted him for his performances during the Nats' April games, Leonard led the contest. By one vote he won the honors from Charley Gelbert and Buddy Byer, who were in a tie for second place.

To Leonard will go the first of The Post's monthly awards—a $50 merchandise order on any Washington store of his choosing.

Leonard rolled up his 10 points previous to yesterday's game at Yankee Stadium, and none of the other leaders in the contest won points enough to overtake him as he sat on the bench. Yesterday's 10 points were distributed as follows:

Three to Joe Krakauskas, who pitched 4-hit ball for 7 innings; 2 points to Alex Alexandra, who saved the game with his relief pitching; 2 to Jimmy Wasdell, who made 4 hits; 2 points to Buddy Lewis, whose eighth inning single drove in the winning runs, and 1 to George Case, whose sacrifice fly produced the tying run.

Very appropriately, Leonard is the winner of the April Man of The Month contest. During the month he was the only Washington pitcher to turn in two victories and both of his performances were impressive ones. He provided the first feature of the Washington season by beating the Yankees, 3 to 1, and came back in his next turn to deliver a 6-3 victory over the Athletics, winning 5 points for each feat.

Triumphant in four of their last five games, possessors of a three-game winning streak, and now only a half-game removed from the league lead, the surprising Nats entrained tonight for the West.

Following an off-day tomorrow, occasioned by the long train jump to St. Louis, the Nats will open a two-game series with the Browns on Tuesday.

Jimmy DeShong, still seeking his first victory of the season after losses to the Athletics and Red Sox, is scheduled for the opening game pitching assignment against the Browns.

Jimmy Bloodworth, rookie second baseman, was released by the Nats to their Springfield Farm in the Eastern League today.

Georgetown Golfers Play Duke Today

Duke University golfers, Southern Conference and Southern Intercollegiate champions, meet their stiffest test of the season this afternoon at Capital Golf Club in Intercollegiate Champion Johnny Burke & Co., from Georgetown.

The Duke team practiced over the Capital course yesterday and Bobby Brownell, the District's top-ranking golfer and second or third man on the Duke team, led the trial scores with a 72, two strokes over par.

The Blue Devils have already beaten Wake Forest, Dartmouth, Georgia Tech, North Carolina and L. S. U. this year, while the Hoyas lone match was a 4½-to-4½ tie with Navy.

Every member of the visiting squad has a title of some sort, including Joe Taylor, recently crowned Southern collegiate champion, an event which Brownell lost in the semifinals.

Duke's line-up is not known, but Burke and Pettijohn will play in the top twosome for the Hoyas, with the local boys, Billy Dettweiler and Billy Shea in the second spot, probably opponents of Brownell and his partner.

The Duke team has played the course three times in the past three weeks and has not been impressive, and knowledge of the course may result in an upset win for the Hoyas.

Bobys Nine Wins

Babbington slammed a double and a triple yesterday to lead the Phil Boby's softball team to a 6-5 victory over New Deal at Sherwood Playground. The winners plan to enter the Sherwood Softball League.

Plaza Wine, Veterans Win Softball Tilts

Kann's Loses, 10-08, And Golub's Market Is Turned Back, 5-2

Irish War Veterans and Plaza Wine and Liquor teams won the only two contests in the Sports Center Softball League yesterday at Gonzaga Field, the vets staging a final-inning rally to beat Kann's Department Store, 10 to 8, and Plaza defeating Golub's Market, 5 to 2.

It was the second victory for the Veterans in the Sunday morning loop, and Bud Simonds, catcher, was the star of the performance. In five times at bat, Simonds smashed out four hits, his most decisive bingle coming in the ninth to score Tots Long with the winning run. Though he was credited with the victory, "Tarzan" Webb gave up ten hits to the walloping Counter Clerks, the same number as totalled by the Vets.

The Golub-Plaza affair was considerably less of a slugging duel, the Winemen getting only eight hits and Golub's five. Both teams tallied once in the first, and Golub went into a 2-to-1 lead in the third. A Plaza run in the fifth knotted the count and two more in the sixth put the winner ahead for good.

No-Hitter Registered

Johnny Kiffinger, pitching for the Northeast Cougars, turned in a no-hit, no-run performance yesterday as his team took a 1 to 0 victory from the Chevy Chase Terrors. The game went only five innings on the Ellipse diamond. Only two men got to first base, one through an error of Kiffinger's and the other on a misplay by Sullivan.

Nats Defeat Yanks, 3 to 2

stirred up 11 hits to the Yankees' four, but they were leaving men on bases with discouraging frequency in the first seven innings, profaning a sensational pitching performance by Krakauskas who didn't allow the Yanks a hit until the sixth.

Scratch Hit

A scratch hit by Joe Gallagher in the seventh inspired a Yankee run. They got it after two were out, when Hildebrand himself scored Gallagher from second with a hit through the box that Krakauskas deflected with his bare hand, but could not knock down.

And the Nats came to bat in the eighth and won the ball game. Travis led the uprising with a single to right, and Jimmy Wasdell made his fourth straight hit, a looper to left that put Travis on second. Rick Ferrell sacrificed the pair along, and Pinch-Hitter Charley Gelbert was purposely walked to fill the bases.

George Case drove in the tying run with a long fly to Selkirk that scored Travis from third, and then Hildebrand unloosed a wild pitch that moved Wasdell to third and Gelbert to second. Whereupon Ruddy Lewis blasted a hot single through the box to score the two winning runs.

Indianhead Trounces 7-Up By 8-2 Score

Marylanders Sew Up Game in First Inning With 3 Runs

Preparing for its first start in the Industrial League on Tuesday, 7-Up nine ran into an unexpected snag yesterday when it traveled to Indian Head, Md., and was soundly threshed by an 8 to 2 count. Played in a heavy mist and bitter cold, the game was never in doubt after the first inning, in which Indian Head scored three runs. 7-Up's feeble efforts to make a contest resulted in only single runs in the second and eighth stanzas.

The full nine innings were pitched by Indian Head's Gates, and he gave up only six safeties. Three hurlers for 7-Up were touched for thirteen hits, and four bases on balls. Johnny Deavers started but was relieved by first Birch and then "Lefty" McIntire. Four errors on the part of the Drinkmen contributed to Indian Head's causes. Simmons, Hirse and Gates were the batting stars for the winners, each getting a pair of hits.

In Capital Night Clubs

JIMMY TO PALL MALL: Jimmy Santmyer and his orchestra are taking over the Pall Mall Room's bandstand this evening. This will be sweet news to the dancing sector who like their rhythm sugared 'n sizzly. Jimmy's a great favorite around town, has played at a number of prominent spots. Ralph Connor will be the star vocalist and drummer of the Santmyer outfit.

TOUR DE CUISINE: Madrillon's Peter Borras is planning to celebrate "National Restaurant Week" (May 8 to 14) by serving the famed typical dishes of various sections of the country. So far, Senor Borras has lined up the food specialties of California, Kentucky, New England, Pennsylvania, Virginia, Maryland and New Orleans.

GRIFFITH FARMS: Ducky news! Griffith Farm is due to open Sunday, May 14, according to a courier who dashed in on horseback. (Anyway, he thinks that the ponies are a great institution.) This means that you and you, and I, will soon be able again to enjoy Tom O'Donnell's notable countryside duck dinners.

OFFERS! OFFERS! Warbler Jackie Burroughs (Hour Glass) who's convalescing from laryngitis, is in a quandary (we think that's the word). She's been offered summer singing engagements with Johnny Johnson's orchestra at New York's Jones Beach, at Rehoboth Beach, Md., and in her home town, Newport News. But she doesn't really like the thought of leaving Hour Glass and her radio dates with the "Home Towners."

OPEN-AIR: Are you one of those unreasonable people who crave the great outdoors and the movies at the same time? The answer is the Open-Air Theater near Alexandria. You just drive in and view the cinema without stirring from your car. Your best girl will like the O-A Theater, too. Or are ye thinking too far ahead?

ICY IMPRESARIO: That's Max Lowe, amusement manager of the Shoreham, who's responsible for the glittering "Ice Show" current in the Blue Room. Max introduced the ice revue idea to America some years ago when he brought the noted Charlotte, champion ice skater of her day, from the Admiral Palast in Berlin to New York's Hippodrome.

It's swing on strings when the Mayflower's Ray Nelson, Johnny Shaw and Frank Cobiello go to work

LOTUS RHAPSODY: It's a "Rhapsody in Rhythm" revue at the Lotus this week. The Earle Lindsay tootsies will present a "Flower Parade," said to be prettier'n any picture, also tap dance to one of Mr. Liszt's "Hungarian Rhapsodies."

Manno and Stafford, one of the country's niftiest dance teams, will join the Lotus show today. Speedy acro-tapping, too, from Vivian Francis.

BOSSES' CROSSES: Lovely singer on telephone. So sorry I didn't get in. I took a little nap and——. Boss. Very interesting, young lady. You just go back and finish your nap—for the length of your contract.

Star dancer on telephone. I won't be able to make it. I sprained my ankle. Boss (and huffed). You mean you sprained your elbow again! Bam!

NEW BOOKING OFFICE: Pete Macias (Lounge Riviera) and Steve Le Sieur (who'll soon be on the Powhatan Roof again) have just opened a booking office at 2400 Sixteenth street. It's a nice tie-up for two of the city's cleverest maestros.

IRISH DOLLS: Lenora's Dancing Dolls, currently decorating Bamboo Gardens, are going to do a new Irish number this week. All Irish eyes will be smiling when the mavourneens go into their jigs. New at Bamboo will be Rasso and Peggy who mix up comedy and juggling. Swing-dancing by Ray Steele. And we hope that Marian Dawn will sing her hot-rhythm version of "Ol' Man River" that's the talk of the town among musicians.

JIMMY SANTMYER, whose orchestra opens tonight at Raleigh's Pall Mall Room

"LIGHTS OUT"—OOH-H! Glen Echo's Mississippi maestro, Herbie Holmes, loves those juicy horror epics of the radio, especially the "Lights Out" hour. He says, "Nothing like a good scare for excitement." For them as can take it, Herbie.

"GOOD-BY, MY HEART," written by Andy Melvin, young Washington advertising man, is getting a great play at most of the night spots. Not only has it been selected as the signature number for Milton Davis' (Rainbow Room) novachord hour on the radio, but it's being played at Shar-Zad, Lounge Riviera, Pall Mall, Lotus, Cafe Caprice, Madrillon, Hi-Hat and the Hour Glass.

NEPTUNE'S DOT: You won't believe it, but cordial and charming Dot O'Connell, manager of the Neptune Room, has been associated with the Lurba restaurant organization for 14 years, she says. And we didn't think that kindergartners could get jobs!

PERSONALITY PIPPLE: Mayfair's much-loved patron, the cheery middle-aged lady whom everyone just calls "Susie." You'll find "Susie" in Mayfair every day of the week, except Sunday—when the place is closed.

"Butch" Brush, Hi Hat's cowboy singer, who looks more like a cowboy than a singer. And you should hear him yodel-

"Rat Trap" Pratt, of the Pirates' Den. Ask him what he does with rats when he catches 'em. On second thought you'd better put cotton in your ears first.

Frank Shubert (Shar-Zad), the only bona fide Hungarian musician in town, we think. He's teaching Singer Lou Martel to speak Hungarian.

Ted Alexander (Paul Kain's Metronome Room Orchestra). A very diverting fella. He's likely to stop bass thumping any minute and go into an ad lib jig.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

The Washington Saengerbund (Paul Otterbach, president; Herbert Karl Herzfeld, director), gives its annual concern Sunday afternoon in the Willard Hotel ballroom, assisted by the St. Ann's Boys' Choir, the Arion Singing Society of Baltimore (Theodor Hemberger, director), and the Saengerbund Women's Chorus (Kurt Hetzel, director).

Before an audience that filled the large ballroom of the Willard Hotel yesterday afternoon, the 88-year-old choral organization, the Washington Saengerbund, gave its spring concert under the direction of a new dynamic young conductor, Herbert Karl Herzfeld. Having begun its existence in 1851, the corporate society naturally has none of its original founding singers left, but Rudolf Schneider, the honorary president, has been singing in the bass section for 51 years, and several other members have records almost as long.

What similar groups have done in various cities of the United States the Washington Saengerbund has done in the Nation's Capital—maintained the old and fine traditions of German choral singing. It is to the work of these organizations as much as to any other source that we owe our familiarity with many German folksongs which have become part of our musical heritage.

In the first two numbers of yesterday's program, an "Ave Verum Corpus" by Mozart and "In Me Gratia" by Gabert, the Saengerbund was joined by St. Ann's Boys Choir, the fresh high school voices blending pleasantly with the mature timbres. This was followed by a chorus from Mozart's "Die Zauberfloete" for the older singers alone.

The second group by the Saengerbund consisted of Mair's "Wilde Rose," Juengst's "Slavonic Serenade," Silcher's "Zu Strassburg auf der Schanz," Werner's Heidenroeslein" and Kountz' "The Sleigh." In this group the singers showed a precision of attack, a surety of tonal gradation, and a robust volume of full tone that reflected credit on their new director. Mr. Herzfeld is a young musician who knows precisely what he wants from his chorus and has an authoritative way in bringing it out.

The women's chorus of the Saengerbund, under the able leadership of Dr. Kurt Hetzel, sang commendably Mendelssohn's "Hebe deine Augen auf," Engelkirchen's "A gruener Linde" and Schubert's "Die Nacht." The part-singing has accuracy and clarity, and the tonal quality was smooth.

Under the direction of Theodor Hemberger, the Arion Singing Society of Baltimore took its turn on the platform with three numbers: Mohring's "Der Trompeter an der Katzbach," and two folksongs, "Du liegst mir in Herzen" and "Muss I denn." The combined Saengerbund and Arion closed the concert with Kalliwoda's "Das Deutsche Lied" and Beethoven's "Die Ehre Gottes," directed by Mr. Herzfeld.

Early in the program, Conrad Bernier, organist at Catholic University, provided an instrumental interlude with Bach's D minor Toccata and Fugue, "Prayers" by Herzfeld and an allegretto movement by Boellmann.

Georgetown Party To Have Stone as Guest of Honor

Associate Justice Harlan Stone of the Supreme Court will be a guest of honor at the twenty-seventh annual banquet tendered by the Georgetown University law school faculty to student members of the Georgetown Law Journal staff, to be held at the Carlton Hotel at 8 o'clock tonight.

Other honor guests will be Maj. Gen. Allen W. Cullion, judge advocate of the United States Army; Peter R. Nehemkis, special counsel for the Securities and Exchange Commission, and Wendell Barge, special assistant to the Attorney General.

The Rev. Francis E. Lucey, S. J., regent of the law school, will present certificates to senior members of the journal staff.

Police Radio Is Topic

Lloyd N. Chatterton, superintendent of the radio division, Cleveland Department of Public Safety, will discuss the modernization of police administration through new developments in communication at a meeting of the Institute of Radio Engineers at 6:30 p. m. May 8 in the Harrington Hotel.

Threat of Building Strike Averted For Time in D. C.

Eleventh-hour decisions to keep open negotiations with the Master Builders' Association yesterday averted, at least for a time, a threatened strike of local building laborers' and carpenters' unions. The two unions will meet the contractors separately tonight, Larry Kelly, president of the laborers' group, said.

Existing wage-hour agreements expired last night, and the Master Builders have so far refused to grant wage increases demanded by the two unions. The carpenters want a seven-hour day at $13 a day, as against an eight-hour day at $12 under the expired contract, while the laborers are demanding 85 cents an hour instead of 70 cents an hour.

If a strike is called, all buildings started since January 1 will be tied up.

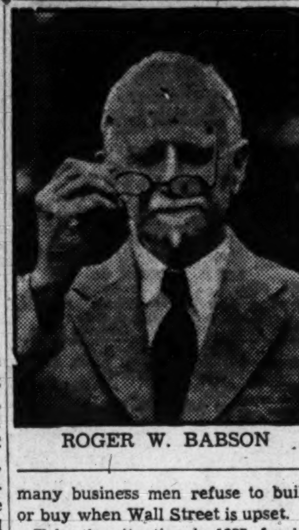
Present Market Thinnest In History, Babson Says

Suppression of 'Riggers' and Other Professionals, He Declares, Also Has Destroyed the Market's Liquidity

By Roger W. Babson

New York City, April 30.—Arriving in New York, I find Wall Street ridden by superstitions—market charts, resistance points, "double bottoms," etc. These investment fads remind me of what happened in Florida just before I came North. Many of the country's newspapers carried the story. A dear old lady from Mississippi came to Florida and "made it rain." As the place where Miss Sotate performed is in the next town to Babson Park, Fla., naturally I observed the situation with much interest.



ROGER W. BABSON

The rain-maker impressed me as an honest and God-fearing woman. Apparently she earnestly believes in her theory. She "sat" with her umbrella by the lakeside until it did rain! As a result, a great number of people are sincerely convinced that she brought the rain. Now, in my humble opinion the Wall Street chartists with their "rain-making" theories about the stock-market are operating as did Miss Lillie Stoate. Such stunts may seem to work at times, but when they do, they are coincidences. Here is the joker about chart-reading: By the time the signals have definitely shown that the move is a bull or bear market, the swing is often practically completed.

What is "Thin Market"

Yet, New York City has been in a furor recently about these chart theories. Surely, this is old stuff, but here is the explanation for all the excitement. Through the SEC regulations and other developments, the market has been made thin. Hence, when any market pressure group, such as the chart readers and their followers, get a "bear" tip from their dope, their selling stampede upsets the Big Board. For instance, from March 25 to April 10 stock values shrank 14 per cent, or $6,000,000,000, with an actual exchange of ownership of only one per cent of listed shares!

What is a thin market? A thin market means that there are very few people who are willing either to buy or sell stocks. Ten years ago it sometimes took a five-thousand-share-lot to move the price of a well-known stock one-eighth of a point. In the recent decline some of these stocks broke two or more points on a few-hundred-share sale. The "spread" between the price at which investors are willing to buy a stock and the price at which other investors are willing to sell a stock may now run as much as five points. It sometimes takes several hours to bring the buyers and sellers together.

Riggers Cleaned Out

As a result of this "thin" market, Wall Street is very sensitive to sentiment and feelings today. With radio commentators conjuring up war scarces, it takes only a few frightened people to start the market downhill. Ten years ago the selling of a few timid investors would quickly be absorbed by professional traders and others who were always ready to take a chance to scalp a fraction of a point. Today, however, these scalpers, short sellers, margin buyers, and other professionals are no longer in Wall Street. The SEC has smoked them out and driven them away.

Ten years ago it was far too easy for a bunch of Wall Street operators to take the shirt off the back of a Main street business man. The SEC has cleaned out most of the graft and "fast stuff" of the type that was pulled in 1929. As in all reforms which are made, however, someone has to pay the price. The price for kicking the riggers out of Wall Street has been the creation of the thinnest market in our history. The carrying-out of the Securities Exchange act has destroyed much of the liquidity of the market. This change can have very serious consequences on future business conditions because so many business men refuse to build or buy when Wall Street is upset.

Take the situation in 1937, for instance. I do not believe there was any basic need for a business recession at that time, or certainly not as serious a one as we had. The market drop, however, caused a reduction of $30,000,000,000 in stock values in nine weeks. Business men thought that industry and trade were going to the dogs. Hence, they stopped buying, cut wages, fired salesmen, and got ready for a depression. When all business men did this, naturally it "did rain!"

The same danger exists today. The market average was 150 in the middle of March. Now it is about 20 points lower. Most people measure their wealth by the price of their stocks. A man whose stocks were worth $6,000 a month ago can get only $5,000 today. So he decides not to buy the new automobile that he had been considering. Or, maybe he cancels his order for a new refrigerator. Perhaps he decides not to build the new home he contemplated. If the market does not snap right back, he may change his summer vacation plans. At any rate, he feels definitely poorer than he did a few weeks ago.

Outlook in Jeopardy.

His reaction, multiplied by that of millions of consumers, merchants, and manufacturers throughout the country can hurt business. Yet, there is no real reason why the markets should have gone panicky. Business is 18 per cent higher today than it was a year ago. The war scare, plus the combined selling of a bunch of chart worshippers, has knocked the thin market down 25 points. In short, Wall Street is operating on rain-making theories rather than on basic business trends. Under such conditions the stock exchange may become a paradise for two-bit speculators and a hazard for legitimate investors.

So, I earnestly urge the SEC and the New York Stock Exchange to get together and restore some of the old liquidity to the stock market. I say again that real security comes only through courage. The most worthwhile charts are the Ten Commandments and the Multiplication Table.

Rukeyser Says: Many Lack Jobs, But 40 Million Are Working

By Merryle Stanley Rukeyser,
(International News Service Economic Commentator.)

New York, April 30.—May Day is an appropriate reminder of the dignity of human labor. Subnormal interludes of unemployment becloud the basic fact that a nation's resources are largely measured in human muscle and intelligence. Accordingly, in an economy in equilibrium, there cannot be a surplus of the human factor.

As a matter of fact, the rough estimate of 10,000,000 unemployed leads to erroneous thinking. If similar bookkeeping were used in Germany, the Reich could not boast of full employment, for over there many are engaged in government projects analogous to the WPA.

The common American unemployment estimate is an unreliable economic index, for it includes also the normal number of defectives and unemployables, and is padded by the depression tendency of old folks to work longer and of young folks to seek work sooner, and of wives to press for jobs to supplement the incomes of their husbands.

The truth is better revealed by completing the bookkeeping entries, and showing that, even if 10,000,000 are unemployed, these are, according to the Census Bureau, upward of 50,000,000 subject to gainful employment, leaving at least 40,000,000 actually at work. And, since there are 30,000,000 American families, this would mean that there are on the average one and one-third persons gainfully employed for every family.

Such clarification is not intended to minimize the importance of seeking to establish a balanced economy in which labor can be fully employed.

In another sense, the bulk figures on unemployment are misleading. The aggregate statistics hide shortages in specialized fields, such as skilled labor and, in some sections, of domestic servants.

The greatest economic evil incidental to prolonged unemployment is the tendency to fail to renew the labor supply with an adequate flow of apprentices. Accordingly, the full consequences of the deficiencies in the making may not be realized until the next period of prosperity.

In a well-ordered and balanced economy, specialized workers give employment to one another interchanging among themselves the products of their hours of labor.

The work-capacity of the individual is an essential national resource, and it is destructive to keep potentially productive persons in idleness. Fitted out with more and better tools and superior power equipment, human workers are more productive than ever before. Thus under balanced conditions, they can enjoy more and better goods than in the past.

The great fallacy of the period is the assumption that we need more consumers. That is an astigmatic and partial view of the problem. It wouldn't do through social credit schemes and Townsend plans to drop purchasing power out of a balloon. What the country really needs is more producer-consumers, who, through the exchange of goods and services, give a quid pro quo for what they receive. Producer-consumers put back into the heap of consumable goods as much as they take out.

They create a healthy business process by continually exchanging their goods or services for those of other specialized workers. That is what is meant by the new interdependence of workers. As a result of this specialization, workers are dependent on the processes of exchange, and hence, the importance of balanced relationships which facilitate exchanges among the producing groups has decome heightened.

5,000 Catholic Youth March On Their 'Day'

Mgr. Freking Demands Youngsters Object to Any Overseas Fight

Massed upon the Washington Monument grounds after a procession down Constitution avenue, more than 5,000 "Catholic Youth Day" celebrants yesterday were urged by the Very Rev. Mgr. Edward A. Freking to object conscientiously to participation in European wars.

"Decide now that you will defend these shores of ours from the Atlantic to the Pacific, but that you will be conscientious objectors against fighting on foreign soil," the speaker, secretary of the Catholic Students' Mission Crusade, co-sponsors of the rally, shouted from the Sylvan Theater platform.

Harry Somerville Is Escort

A few minutes before, the Most Rev. Amleto Cicognani, Apostolic Delegate to the United States, wearing his gold miter and cope, stood before an improvised altar and pronounced the pontifical military benediction upon the audience while "Taps" was played.

Escorted by top-hatted Harry P. Somerville, Grand Marshal of the parade, and others, the Apostolic Delegate was driven to the grounds from the reviewing stand, where he had joined with other ecclesiastical dignitaries in watching the hundreds of marchers step briskly by.

Georgetown R. O. T. C. There

Led by a motorcycle escort of Metropolitan Police under the command of Maj. Brown, the first to pass the stand where the grand marshal and his aides; the executive board of the clerical conference, and the R. O. T. C. unit and band of Georgetown University.

Swinging behind them were the members of the executive board of the Washington Local Conference, the recipients of Crusade awards, and the cadet corps and band of St. John's College, Washington, several of whose members formed an honor guard for the Apostolic Delegate in front of the stand.

Dr. Yu Pin in Stands

Next came members of the Holy Comforter Boys' Band, followed by girls of the school in brown frocks and hats, with gold ribbons about their necks. Close behind stepped the white-bloused, sailor-hatted girls of St. Ann's parochial school.

Let by the Elks' Boys Band, of Lodge No. 15, the second division included children from St. Gabriel's, St. Syprian's, St. Dominic's, Dunblane Hall, Holy Name, Holy Redeemer and Holy Trinity. The parade was reviewed from a flag-draped stand by a group of officials, including the purple-capped Dr. Yu Pin, biship of Nanking, China, and his bearded aide, Dr. Stephen Pan.

Also looking on were Msgr. Joseph McShea, attache of the Apostolic Delegation; Msgrs. John A. Ryan and Barry O'Toole; Dr. Arthur O'Leary, president of Georgetown University; Dr. Joseph Denges; Dr. Joseph Fenton; Department Commander James T. Brady, of Cathedral Post, of the American Legion; Lieut. Joseph F. Fitzgerald, of the 121st Engineers; Father Vincent S. McDonough, student counsellor at Georgetown and Msgr. David O'Dwyer.

Marching behind the Knights of Columbus Band came members of the third division, junior colleges and high schools, including St. Patrick's Academy, St. Cecilia's Academy, Georgetown Visitation Convent, St. Anthony's High School, the National Training School Boys' Band; Immaculate Conception Academy, St. Paul's Academy, St. Rose's Technical School, as well as groups from Maryland, led by St. Dominic's Fife and Drum Corps, of Baltimore.

Sons and Daughters of the American Legion Band led the next division—organizations—in which Girl Scouts, Boys Scouts and Cubs marched, as well as the band of James Reese Europe Post No. 5; St. Vincent de Paul unit; St. Augustine's Junior Club and St. Cyprian.

Nurses in Fifth Unit

With members of the Metropolitan Police Boys' Club leading, the Veterans' Units and colleges of the fifth division drew a big ovation from the throngs lining the avenue, who saw blue-caped nurses from Providence Hospital; gray-garbed nurses from Georgetown, and groups from Hagerstown, Baltimore and Cumberland.

Last came the largest delegation—more than 500 members of 32 orders of Catholic University, marching in the Clerical Conference division and led by the Catholic University band. Also participating was the Fourteen Holy Martyrs Band of Baltimore.

Speaking after a message had been read from Archbishop Curley, praising the Mission Crusade movement, Mgr. Freking attributed the spread of war propaganda to "hidden forces guided by foreign influences, whose ultimate objective is the overthrow, not merely of this government or of that, but of all Christianity and of all that we cherish today as Christian civilization."

Disguise Domestic Problems

Alluding to the political uses of pro-war propaganda, Mgr. Freking said: "This shouting for the defense of democracy in foreign lands does not ring true while millions of our own people are unemployed and millions more live in conditions which are little better than economic slavery; we are disguising our domestic problems while pretending to be mediators of justice in other parts of the world."

Father Timothy Donoghue, S. A., of the Catholic University Conference of Clerics and Religious, co-sponsors of the youth rally, served as general chairman. The Rev. Father Vaeth was archdiocesan director of the celebration.

Maryland Tries First Tobacco Auction Today

Hughesville Market Expected to Raise Prices 3 to 5 Cents

Today is an important one for the tobacco-growing industry of southern Maryland. For three centuries tobacco grown in this five-county belt has been sold, sight unseen, in hogsheads. Today a "new" system of the auction will be tried.

The auction system will be launched at Hughesville in Charles County and thousands of growers, hopeful of obtaining better prices for their crops, are expected to be on hand when the selling starts at 9:30 a. m.

In North Carolina, Kentucky and Virginia, where cigarette tobacco is a principal "money" crop, the hogshead system is a thing of the past, but Maryland has clung to the old system, which started in Colonial times.

Two Auction Markets

The Hughesville market is one of two in southern Maryland established for the selling of tobacco by auction. The other, at Upper Marlboro, in Prince Georges County, will open tomorrow.

More than 100,000 pounds of tobacco are stored at the two warehouses ready for the opening bids. Growers say this crop is almost as good as that of 1936-37, when they got the best price in history. The average price that year was 25.44 cents per pound. This brought seven million dollars into the pockets of southern Maryland farmers. But last year, it was a different story. The average price was 17 cents a pound—so low that growers rebelled against the system of shipping their crops to Baltimore in hogsheads and sought another way of marketing their crops. The auction system, eliminating the cost of packing and shipping is the result.

Expect Better Prices

Representatives of the leading cigarette manufacturers will attend today's auction premiere. Supporters of the auction system say that these manufacturers will pay from 3 to 5 cents more per pound than if the crop were packed in hogsheads, because they can see what they are buying.

The auction system was assured of support from the growers at a series of meetings held last fall under auspices of the Farm Bureau in Prince Georges, Charles, Calvert, St. Marys and Anne Arundel counties, which comprise the southern Maryland tobacco belt. In a good year, 30 million pounds of tobacco are produced in this area.

The Federal Diary

By The Diarist

A commentary on the state of traffic affairs in the Government triangles is found in the Agriculture Welfare Association's plan to reserve parking lots for employes in southwest Washington with a driving time from the lot to the South Agriculture Building only "five minutes by taxicab and ten minutes by bus."

Bad as it is to have to take a bus or cab from parking lot to work, the association's plan may help solve a difficult problem, since parking space near Government offices is at a premium. The association would charge $1 to $1.25 a month per car, hopes to install a filling station where gasoline can be bought at a 2 cent per gallon discount, and points out that bus fare would be 8 1-3 cents or cab fare 10 cents apiece if two users took the same taxi.

Those interested get in touch with Albert M. Day, president, Welfare Association, Biological Survey.

Bob Burns Says—

Us humans don't realize the value of things until it's too late. It's too bad, too.

I just sort of choke up every time I think about how my poor old Grandpaw Pelican Snelson suffered after he broke his mustache cup. For generations that cup had been handed down from mustache to mustache.

When some valuable has gone out of your life, all you can do is be optimistic and make the best of it. One time I visited my Uncle Gus Rooks. I says, "Gus, I heard you mashed your thumb and I came over to offer my sympathy in your misfortune."

My Uncle Gus says, "Misfortune nothing! That's one of the best things that ever happened to me. It taught me just how valuable it is. I've found 467 things I use my thumb for every day." He says, "Here, Robin, will you open this knife for me? Thanks. That makes 468."

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

Bearing out Robert M. Brannon's statement, "Cards are cockeyed," comes a hand from contributor M. R. G., which registered a swing of 3,610 points.

A vulnerable small slam, doubled, which with any opening lead but the one made would have been easily fulfilled to score 1,760 (this includes the rubber bonus) was defeated seven tricks for a loss of 1,850, after deducting the 150 honors.

This may not be a record but even at a "quarter-a-corner," it would make a sizeable crimp in the leader's score.

He Seconds the Motion

Here is the way M. R. G. tells it: "Just after I had finished reading Mr. Brannon's interesting comment about Cards are cockeyed, three of my friends and I sat down to a hand which, while an isolated case, gives you an idea of how cockeyed cards can be."

The hand and the bidding that took place are shown in today's box.

Today's Hand

NORTH DEALER

North:
♠ 9 7 6 2

◇ J 9 7 5 4 3 2

West:

SOUTH

East:

♣ K J 10 7 6 5 4 2

South:
♠ 8 5 4 3
♡ J 9 7 6 5 3
♡ None
♣ A Q 9

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
Pass	1 ♣	1 ♡	2 ♠
Pass	3 ♣	Pass	3 ♠
Pass	4 ♣	Pass	4 ♡
Pass	5 ◇	Pass	6 ♠
Pass	Pass	Dbl	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: 5 ◇.

"North opened his fourth best diamond, which I trumped, and I returned my fourth best heart. As you can see, we made the first eight tricks and declarer was left with his very pretty spade honors for the first five tricks.

"He was set 2,000 and with any other opening he would have made six spades, doubled. The total swing was, if I estimate it correctly, 3,610 points."

Not Forcing, But——

Though slams are responsible for a great number of points lost at the bridge table, other bidding situations worry players too. R. D. submits this hand for which he would like to have the correct reply to an opening two no-trump bid. He says. "With neither side vulnerable, North makes a fourth hand opening bid of two no trump, East passes; what should South respond, holding these cards:

"♠ 7 4 2
"♡ K 8 6 2
"◇ 10 5
"♣ J 9 7 4"

South should raise to three no trump.

An opening two no-trump bid is not forcing, but partner is expected to raise with as much as a king or two queens, or to take out in any five or six-card suit.

Naturally, if a player is to make such a light response, the opening two no-trump bid must be well fortified with high cards.

Lilibet Still Natural, Mannerly Despite Adoration of an Empire

New 'Lassie Bairn' Ended Her Reign As Only Child

By Lady Cynthia Asquith

CHAPTER XIV.

"Why should anybody want to hear about our home life?" Queen Elizabeth asks with a smile. "It is just like that of any other happy home." But we will treat this as a purely rhetorical question and, having glanced at her as a social worker, return to consider her as a mother.

So soon as she returned from her long absence in Australia, she settled down to enjoy the captivating company of her little daughter, whose benevolent autocracy lasted until 1930, when a sister came to turn Princess Elizabeth into a Dowager baby.

Thunderous Salute

In London the bells of St. Paul's clanged out rejoicings, and the guns of the Tower of London added their thunder in a salute of 41 guns, the royal salute of 21 with 20 others on behalf of the lord mayor and corporation.

At Glamis, the home of her mother's happy childhood, the "lassie's bairn," as the villagers called the baby princess, was greeted by an enormous bonfire. Flaming on the top of Hunter's Hill, this glorious blaze lit up the larch, spruce and oak trees, crackling and roaring to the great disturbance of the roe deer. This bonfire had been set alight by four girls with the same torches that had kindled the one lit in celebration of the wedding of the baby's mother seven years before.

A few weeks later the new baby was christened Margaret Rose in the private chapel at Buckingham Palace. The font that had been used for Princess Elizabeth's christening was again brought from Windsor and the same christening robes were worn. Fascinated, the baby's elder sister watched the ceremony with widening eyes.

In no capacity has Queen Elizabeth better discharged her trusteeship to the country than in the gentle wisdom with which she has brought up its two little princesses. This can have been no easy task. To give Princess Elizabeth an early sense of her great obligations and yet keep her natural and unselfconscious must have needed all a mother's loving vigilance.

To the lasting credit of Queen Elizabeth be it said that in this "child of many prayers," we do see qualities not often found together. Her extreme civility never makes her appear unspontaneous, neither has whatever discipline may have been necessary done anything to lessen her natural loveliness. If few grown-up people could be more sensible, certainly no child could be more gay.

Princess Elizabeth has always had a wide circle or adorers. Before she was many months old her photograph was to be seen in every small home all over the empire, and legions of little girls had already been named after her. Her distinct little face soon adorned the Newfoundland stamp, and in the furtherest south the Union Jack now waves over Princess Elizabeth Land.

Instinctive Courtesy

This dedicated child did not delay to show that she had inherited her mother's instinctive courtesy. While still unable to speak she gave unmistakable signs of a wish to set others at their ease.

Some people seem to think that good behavior in a child must denote lack of spirit, but one glance at the radiance and vivacity that ride sparkling in her eyes clears Princess Elizabeth from any suspicion of tameness. Her merry, enterprising face with its ripple of latent mischief proclaims her bubbling and contagious good spirits, and her exquisite manners give no sense of having been imposed by excessive drill. One feels that example has prevailed where precept might well have been in vain.

Thanks to the splendid health and spirits and all the love that surrounds her, the first years of Princess Elizabeth's life have certainly been very pleasant.

That she had been wisely as well as happily brought up was, I consider, clearly proved when the birth of a younger sister ended her reign as an only child.

To Be Continued.

Old Mr. Toad Understands

Old Mr. Toad is a remarkable old fellow. Very likely you do not think so. Very likely you never have given any thought to the matter. It was so with me. For a long time he was—well, just a Toad; that's all. But now I never meet him that I do not feel a certain amount of respect for him. How has he managed to live so long? He has enemies, yet he cannot move quickly to escape. He cannot run away and he cannot fight. He doesn't look smart.

Just now Old Mr. Toad was out of sight. He had buried himself alive by digging into the loose soil with his hind feet and backing in as he dug until finally the loose earth fell in over him and he disappeared. One of Peter Rabbit's small sons had watched this performance in open-mouthed astonishment. He had said aloud that he didn't believe it, and a hissing voice had asked what it was he didn't believe. Startled, he turned to face a stranger whose looks he didn't like at all. It made him distrustful. So he hurriedly hopped a few hops off to one side and then sat up to stare at the stranger.

Now the latter was none other than Bluffer the Adder, whom some folks call Puff Adder and some Hissing Adder and some Flat-headed Adder, and who is the Hog-nosed snake. You see, the tip of his nose turns up a little like the nose of a Hog. He didn't chase the small Rabbit. He can't travel fast like his cousin, Mr. Blacksnake. In fact, he is one of the slowest members of his race. He wasn't interested in the young Rabbit anyway. He had stopped right where Mr. Toad had disappeared in the ground, so that he actually was directly above Old Mr. Toad. Of course, he didn't know this, and it was a very good thing for Mr. Toad that he didn't.

"Don't be afraid. I won't hurt you," hissed Bluffer. His head was raised and his tongue kept flickering out as he stared at the little Rabbit. That stare made the latter most uncomfortable.

"What are you?" asked the small bunny, for he never before had seen a member of the Snake family.

"Do you mean what am I or who am I?" hissed Bluffer.

Bluffer explained and the little Rabbit's eyes opened very wide as he listened. "Oh you must be the one that Mr. Toad is afraid of!" he exclaimed.

Instantly Bluffer raised his head a little higher, his tongue flicked out and in, out and in faster than before, and into those staring eyes came a gleam of excitement. "Have you seen Mr. Toad around here?" hissed Bluffer.

The little Rabbit was frightened. He hopped off a little farther. As he started he thumped the ground with his hind feet. He had done the same thing when Bluffer had first startled him. "I wouldn't tell you if I had," said the small Rabbit.

"That means that you have," hissed Bluffer. "Tell me where he is! Tell me at once." He began to glide toward the small Rabbit, and bunny took to his long heels once more. And again he thumped as he started. He didn't do it for any particular purpose. He just did it automatically.

Old Mr. Toad heard those little thumps. You see, they traveled along the ground. They were faint, but Old Mr. Toad understood them. He understood them perfectly. "That little scamp has been scared by some one or something. I think I will stay buried right here for a while," thought he.

He did. And now perhaps you begin to understand how Old Mr. Toad has managed to live so long. He is smarter than he looks.
